Story of Two Hens
Why Madam Queen Fainted
How $150,000,000 Grew
Imitating the Killers

—By ARTHUR BRISBANE—

THE GOVERNMENT sets a good example. The war department building projects totaling $10,000,000 will employ 2,252 men.

What is more important, Clarence Woolley, head of the American Radiator and other important companies, said yesterday: "For the first time in 28 months the curve on private residence building that had been steadily going down, turned upward."

That is important. Building private residences shows returning courage, and courage must come before prosperity.

MR. WOOLLEY was at a luncheon given by B. F. Gimbel, in honor of Freeman Gosden, better known to you as "Amos" of Amos and Andy. Andy, whose real name is Correll, could not come because of illness. But in spite of that illness, he has left the hospital every day to do his broadcasting.

THERE IS A MORAL lesson in a story told by Amos about two hens. A big one, bragging, said:

"I get 55 cents a dozen for my eggs. How much do you get?"

The little hen said:

"I only get 40 cents a dozen. I wouldn't spoil my figure for any 15 cents."

AMOS DIDN'T SAY SO, but there would be some better babies in the United States if so many women, like the little hen, were not afraid of spoiling their figures at a critical time, trying to squeeze in when they ought to expand, or feeding the baby on some substitute for mother's milk.

MATHEW S. SLOAN, who attended the Amos and Andy luncheon, asked Amos: "Tell us what made Madam Queen faint in the courtroom." Amos instantly replied: "She saw her electric light bill."

Mr. Sloan is president of the Edison Electric Company of New York.

MISS ELLA V. VON E. WENDEL is dead, last of the Wendels. Her little white dog, Tobey, last of a long line of Tobeys, survives, no other natural heir to a fortune of $150,000,000.

Miss Ella lived in a great house on Fifth avenue, with great stores near her, and Tobey took his exercise in a big yard, worth several millions of dollars. Miss Wendel declined to sell at any price, because "Tobey must have his exercise."

Now all the Wendels are gone, leaving real estate all over New York City, leaving, for your reflection, a rule established by the founder of the family, John Gottlieb Wendel, who told his children: "Buy, but never sell real estate."

Tobey will be lonely. He always ate at a little table near the big dining table of his mistress, and slept in a little bed beside her bed. Who will care for him? Money can't do it. All of the Wendel $150,000,000 cannot make up for loneliness.

HARRY W. WOODRING, governor of Kansas, yesterday vetoed three bills making death in the electric chair the penalty for murder in the first degree, and robbery with firearms.

Kansas is to be congratulated on having a governor who will not let his Legislature, if he can prevent it, push the state of Kansas back into the dark ages.

The state of Michigan will have a referendum on restoring the death penalty, unknown in that civilized state for many years. It is to be hoped that the citizens of Michigan will not put their state back among those that repay killing with killing, making the state imitate the murderer.

NOT EVERYBODY can create a great city and make it last. Peter the Great built St. Petersburg on the shores of a cold river in the North, to get away from Moscow, which he hated because of his boyhood spent in Asiatic superstition.

St. Petersburg still stands, although Bolshevism has turned back toward Moscow, for reasons of its own.

THE PEOPLE of Australia decided to build a new magnificent capital and city, located at Canberra, 200 miles from Sydney and 400 miles from Melbourne. The corner stone was laid in 1920, and already Australia is convinced that it is too far away, costs too much for upkeep and should be scrapped.

Many have been the ambitious city plans of peoples and rulers from the beginning of cities. The most ambitious plan was Alexander's. He planned to carve a great statue of himself out of a mountain of stone, build a highway along the outstretched arm, and locate the city in the palm of the statue's hand. That would have been worth while. He died too soon.

THE WOMEN of England, to their honor, are interested in British progress and welfare.

One pleasant young woman contributed $50,000 to build the British automobile that recently went 245 miles an hour, breaking all records.

Another British woman gives nearly half a million that the British may appear with honor in the next Schneider Cup air race.

Now Dame Ethel Locke-King promotes a gigantic airport that will have a run of a half a mile in each direction, with a railroad branch bringing it within half an hour of London, and

CITY WORK QUESTIONED; TIPS AID QUIZ

Auditors Hint Important Discoveries in Records, Repeat Need of Secrecy.

Emblem at $75, Custom Tires Priced at $732 on Mayor's Car Without Bids.

Investigations into the city's methods of placing contracts and making purchases yesterday brought forth these new developments:

1. Public Safety Director James M. Clark and City Council again apparently ignored law requiring bids on work exceeding $500 in making improvements to Squirrel Hill fire station.

2. Scores of suggestions and additional information on Department of Supplies buying methods received by investigating agencies.

3. Mayor Charles H. Kline purchased six custom-built tires for his official automobile at a cost of $732 without asking bids, although trade-in reduced cost to $450, records reveal.

Investigators delving into city records found indications that Director Clark employed two contracting firms to remodel the fire station adjoining the Squirrel Hill police station without asking bids on the work or letting contracts.

NO RECORD OF BIDS

In lieu of a contract, a resolution of City Council, dated January 21, 1930, empowered the Controller to pay the Rubinstein Construction Company $1,187.23 and Ira C. Wilcox, Inc., $983 for work done on the Squirrel Hill fire station. Although both amounts exceeded $500, no indication that Director Clark had even advertised for bids was found.

Clark was "too busy" to explain the weak points in the remodeling of the fire station to reporters yesterday. So was his chief clerk.

Mayor Kline's $6,746 automobile has been responsible for another purchase by the city executive without obtaining bids, records reveal. Three weeks after the purchase of the limousine, the Mayor ordered six special custom built tires at a total cost of $732 from the Lowe Motor Company. He sent a bill to the controller's office for $450 for payment in full. A trade-in allowance of $282 had been allowed on the three-weeks old tires, it was shown. A set of

Hoover to Sail Caribbean; Later to Visit Four States

WASHINGTON, March 14.—(AP.)—President Hoover plans to make several trips in the next few months, beginning with a 10-day voyage to Porto Rico and the Virgin Islands, beginning next week.

His Caribbean voyage is designed for relaxation after the strenuous congressional session and to give him opportunity to confer with Theodore Roosevelt of Porto Rico and Gov. Paul M. Pearson, of the Virgin Islands.

The trip will be made from Norfolk on the reconditioned battleship Arizona.

Returning, President Hoover will journey to four states during the early summer to deliver addresses and may take a vacation trip into the Far West later. Also he will speak four times at the Capital.

The first speech outside Washington will be May 30, at Valley Forge, Pa.

President Hoover will address the Indiana Republican Editorial Association June 15 and on consecutive days will dedicate the memorial to Warren G. Harding at Marion, O., and the Lincoln Tomb at Springfield, Ill. He also will review an encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic at Columbus, O., June 16.

Speeches in Washington will be before the annual meeting of the American Red Cross, April 13; the Pan American Union, April 14; the International Chamber of Commerce May 4 and a convention celebrating the fiftieth anniversary of the Red Cross May 21.

At 80 Lone 'Fling' Was Evening at Tex Guinan's

By DAVID P. SENTNER.
International News Service.

NEW YORK, March 14.—Ella Wendel, aged hermitress of Fifth avenue, was alone no longer tonight.

Death paid a visit to the last of the six grand-daughters of Gottlieb Wendel, fur trader and confrere of John Jacob Astor.

Wendel, through his real estate purchases, had left a fortune estimated at from $100,000,000 to $200,000,000. His grandson, John G. Wendel, Jr., left his rulings to his sisters—never to sell his real estate, keep aloof from the world, and let not the march of modernity cross the traditions of the Wendels.

The drawn shades on the mouldering, gloomy Wendel mansion tonight on Fifth avenue have been that way since it was built three-quarters of a century ago.

As the Avenue sprouted modern skyscrapers, modern apartment houses and a modern cathedral, the old-fashioned, drab Wendel mansion on the corner of Thirty-ninth street balked all efforts of real estate operators to acquire it.

DWELT IN RECLUSE

Behind the mildewed brick edifice dwelt 80-year-old Ella Wendel. She used no electric lights, no telephone, nor permitted the advantages of a radio to break the tedium and quietness. Ella never had even an automobile. She retained the Wendel family coach until John, the old family coachman, died in 1929. Then she ordered all the aged coach horses shot at her country place at Irvington-on-the-Hudson and the coach was sold.

There was one who mourned the passing of the aged spinster—her brother had disapproved of

AUTO ALCOHOL TAKES 3 LIVES

Three men were dead today from drinking automobile radiator alcohol at a party in a shanty on the McKeesport city dump.

The dead were William Johnston, 40; Philip Ashton, 31, and Harry Isenberg, 27, the latter of 414 Twenty-ninth street, McKeesport.

Frank Burrows, foreman at the dump, discovered Johnston dead and Ashton dying in the shanty, after Isenberg called to him for aid. The latter two died in the McKeesport Hospital. Isenberg told police he had bought the alcohol at a garage with 40 cents begged by his companions on McKeesport streets.

Successful Man Meets Tax With Next Year's Pay

—By ARTHUR 'BUGS' BAER—

Racer has just scooted 100 miles per hour in one of those baby automobiles.

The general effect looks like a midget Paul Revere scramming under a sink on a wet roach.

And March 15th is the day that every good man must come to the ache of the party. And how it aches.

On March 15th the army of the unemployed leans back and laughs at the busy navy.

If you made any dough last year you have got to step forward and lay it on the line.

And how it hurts. It hurts more than a sword swallower taking a bow in the middle of his act.

You're all right if you have a family of loving exemptions. And you're all right if you are a bootlegger.

It's been quite some years since we pointed out that a successful man is one who can borrow enough on his next year's salary to pay his last year's income tax.

And that's what we are going to try to do.

BOLT FORECAST BY WHEELER IF RASKOB RULES

Montana Senator Talks Of Third Party; Sees Hope For Victory in Roosevelt.

By EDWARD L. RODDAN.
Universal Service.

WASHINGTON, March 14.—Blunt warning was served on the Democrats today that they must nominate a Progressive in 1932 or a third party will be placed in the field.

This challenge came from Senator Burton K. Wheeler (Dem.), of Montana, who bolted his party in 1924 to run for the vice presidency on the same ticket with the late Senator "Fighting Bob" LaFollette, of Wisconsin.

Wheeler's statement was a rallying call to Progressive Democrats to combat the efforts of the reactionary elements to saddle the party with a conservative candidate in 1932.

BREAKS WITH NORRIS

While Wheeler participated in the recent Progressive conference here, he broke sharply with Senator Norris, the Progressive leader, in discounting third party movements. The Montana senator said positively there will be a bolt if the reactionaries capture both the Republican and Democratic parties. Wheeler said:

"If the Democratic party wants to win, it must name a Progressive candidate. Notwithstanding the contention of Norris and others, there will be a third party if the Democrats nominate a reactionary."

In Wheeler's view, conditions are shaping up for a repetition of what happened in 1924, when the LaFollette third party movement brought about the election of President Coolidge and the crushing defeat of John W. Davis, the Democratic nominee.

LIKES ROOSEVELT

To prevent another Democratic debacle, Wheeler believes the party should nominate a Progressive like Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt, of New York, whose liberal economic policities would attract the voters of both parties.

Because of his reputation as a keen political observer, there was unusual interest in Wheeler's statement that if the election

CITY MANAGER BILL INDORSED

Urging adoption of the enabling act providing for the city manager plan in Pittsburgh, a delegation of several score of prominent Pittsburghers will go to Harrisburg, Tuesday, March 24, when the proposed measure is scheduled for a hearing in the Municipal Affairs Committee of the House.

Arthur V. Snell, executive director of the Allied Boards of Trade, said his organization, as well as its 44 constituent bodies, would be represented at the public hearing. Mrs. J. O. Miller, chairman of the League of Women Voters, will head a delegation from that organization.

Pershing's Feat Greatest Known

"A military undertaking unparalleled in history" is Gen. John J. Pershing's description of the American offensive in the Meuse-Argonne. Foch, balked in his efforts to break up the American Army, decreed it should participate in two major offensives within 24 days, a project which meant the movement of more than 500,000 troops and 1,000,000 tons of war material. How the A. E. F. met this test is revealed in today's installment of Pershing's memoirs.

ERK PROPOSES PLAN TO HERALD CITY PRODUCTS

Would Advertise Pittsburgh Over World by Stenciling Name on Goods Made Here

Congressman Edmund F. Erk yesterday proposed a new advertising campaign for Pittsburgh, a campaign which he believes would, at slight cost, advertise Pittsburgh products all over the world.

On every piece of steel and every other product sent out from here, Erk would stencil in large letters: PITTSBURGH, PA. He points out that in Washington at the present time countless pieces of Pittsburgh steel are being used in the building program totaling $190,000,000.

DETAILS PLAN

A letter sent by Erk to the Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph, setting forth his plan, says:

"It occurs to me that Pittsburgh is overlooking valuable advertising in failing to call attention to its vast production of structural steel and other materials which are now being used throughout the country as a result of the $634,000,000 public building program and other authorized construction work totaling approximately $1,500,000,000.

"In Washington alone a building program totaling $190,000,000 has been authorized. This program includes possibly some 20 buildings, many of which are now in the course of erection. Here visitors from all parts of the world witness thousands of tons of Pittsburgh steel hoisted to place in the structural work of these great edifices. People comment on this welcome sight, indicating better times ahead and a nearly economic readjustment as a result of the production of this great quantity of steel and other building materials.

CHEERFUL MESSAGE

"Those of us from Pittsburgh hail this as a cheerful message of better business, of mills and fabricating plants resuming operations, of men re-employed, of the resumption of the normal course of life among families

Second Cent Cut Made in Gasoline

Pittsburgh motorists will benefit, beginning tomorrow, from the second one-cent cut in gasoline prices within a week. Large gasoline and oil companies announced the cut Saturday. Under the new scale, price of motor gas will be 17 cents including state tax; high test gas will cost the motorist 20 cents.

The reductions follow lowering of crude oil prices and strenuous competition by independent companies, it is said.

American, Atlantic, Gulf and Standard oil companies announced the reduction.

Vanderbilt Baby Twins Sued for Federal Taxes

NEW YORK, March 14.—(AP.)—Ellen French Vanderbilt and Anne Colby Vanderbilt, twins, were sued by the United States government today—and they're only 20 days old.

The infants, children of Mr. and Mrs. William H. Vanderbilt, were named along with most of their kinfolk in a suit to collect $800,000 in profit taxes and interest from the estate of Cornelius Vanderbilt, who died in 1899.

The legal action was started after representatives of the estate failed to reach an agreement with the government about taxes on $4,100,000, the sum the government contends was profit from the sale of the old Vanderbilt chateau in Fifth avenue at Fifty-seventh street. The property was sold in 1927 for $7,100,000. In 1913 it was valued at $3,000,000. The money was placed in trust for the heirs of Cornelius Vanderbilt, who left a life interest in the chateau to his widow, Alice G. Vanderbilt, now 86 years old.

The complaint was altered just before service to include the twins.

FAKE PRISONER PLEADS GUILTY

James Patrone, 40, of Buffalo, N. Y., alias Joseph Warner, alias Joseph Jarvis, the "substitute" in the Federal Court prisoner substitution case, scheduled for trial Monday at Erie, caused a surprise in Federal Court here yesterday by appearing in court and entering a plea of guilty.

He was alleged to have appeared in Federal Court at Pittsburgh on December 31, 1929, in place of Stanley Wells, of Colburg, Ontario, who had been arrested on a rum smuggling charge.

Wells has not been apprehended since the discovery of the impersonation, and is believed to be hiding in Canada. The other defendants in the indictment charging them with conspiring to substitute a federal prisoner, are Samuel Y. Rossiter, a well known Erie attorney; Joseph D. Donovan, automobile dealer in Erie, and Leaster Beals, alias Fred Black, of Buffalo.

Guard Beaten, Dining Hall, Two Factories Wrecked as Crazed Prisoners Run Wild

Slaying of Three, Alleged Torture of Inmate Blamed; Legislative Probe Started.

Universal Service.

JOLIET, Ill., March 14.—A riot of 1,100 convicts broke out in the old state prison here today, leaving a toll of one prisoner dead, three wounded, one probably fatally, and the rest overpowered.

For a few tense minutes a wholesale prison delivery seemed impending.

The riot followed the slaying of three convicts a few weeks ago as they were attempting an escape, and the more recent death of another convict, Joseph Coakley, after suffering the punishments that are inflicted in solitary.

The dining hall and two workshops were wrecked by the rioting convicts.

Albert Yarbeck, 21, was the convict slain. He died within a few hours after he was shot.

GUARD BEATEN

A captain of guards, B. A. Davenport, was jumped upon and beaten by three of the men before they were shot down. The guard received a broken arm and was badly bruised. Forty-three of the men believed to be ringleaders of the rebellion were placed in solitary confinement in double irons. State highway police augmented the emergency guard system to prevent further outbreaks.

Even as the riot within the walls was raging a legislative committee was making ready to probe conditions at the prison—the so-called ruthless shooting of the three escaping convicts, the death of Joseph Coakley and many other incidents to which their attention had been called.

EARLIER PLOT KNOWN

The committee was told that in the case of the three convicts, their plans for escape were known weeks in advance and the plot could have been thwarted without bloodshed.

The riot today broke out at 11:50 a. m. in the dining hall. The 1,100 prisoners had eaten their meal in silence. Twenty-five guards, unarmed so that the convicts could not obtain weapons in case of a riot, were there under command of Capt. Davenport.

When the inmates had finished eating, the order was given that

To a clump of bushes growing mid-way down a 200-foot precipice, 8-year-old James Thomas, of 203 Sixth street, McKeesport, probably owes his life.

On the outskirts of Port Vue, the lad was seen hanging from the side of the cliff. His feet were dangling. McKeesport police were notified, and James was rescued after a rope was let down to him.

Telling his story to police, the boy said he was tossed over the ledge by some older boys with whom he was playing. The other youths fled.

Beauty, in Cell for Showman's Killing, Regains Calm

YOUNG WIDOW HOPES FOR BAIL, TRIAL CERTAIN

Enjoys Meals, Drinks Wine, Smokes Cigarets in Prison, First Hearing Wednesday

By BARON GEORGE WRANGEL.
Universal Service Special Cable.

NICE, France, March 14.—Comforted by the belief she will ultimately win her freedom, Mrs. Fred G. Nixon-Nirdlinger, now awaiting arraignment for the slaying of her husband, today regained the composure that yesterday deserted her.

Meanwhile, Magistrate Vachier, who on Wednesday will hear the former St. Louis beauty queen's account of how she shot the Philadelphia theater magnate to death, indicated that the young widow will probably be released on bail pending trial some time in August.

Nixon-Nirdlinger was shot, his widow maintains, as he attempted to strangle her in a fit of jealous fury. The shooting took place Thursday night in the Nixon-Nirdlinger villa on the fashionable Promenade Des Anglais while the couple's two young children slept in an adjoining room.

MUST FACE JURY

Denying reports that police were so satisfied with the woman's plea of self-defense that she would probably win her freedom at the preliminary hearing Wednesday, Magistrate Vachier said:

"Regardless of developments, which might be in her favor, Mrs. Nixon-Nirdlinger must face a jury trial in August, as specified by French law in connection with a death by violence.

"But very probably she will be released on bail as soon as public opinion has quieted."

No formal charges have yet been preferred against the slayer. Under French law, a person formally charged with murder cannot be released on bail.

"UNUSUAL SLAYER"

M. Verdier, warden of the cell in which the former Charlotte Isabel Nash, Nixon-Nirdlinger's third wife, is being held today described her as "the most unusual female slayer I have seen in 25 years of experience."

Yesterday hysterical and stricken at thought of her fatherless children, Mrs. Nixon-Nirdlinger, according to M. Verdier, was absolutely calm. She spent hours manicuring her nails, smoking cigarets and enjoying full meals accompanied by cocktails and wine.

The local press is making the case the basis of a campaign for restriction of the sale of firearms. Editorials condemn the facility of their purchase by many foreigners living along the Riviera.

LAWYER TAKES BODY

PARIS, March 14.—(AP.)—The American lawyer, Charles G. Loeb, long time intimate friend of Fred G. Nixon-Nirdlinger, Philadelphia theatrical magnate, killed by his wife Wednesday night, will go to Nice tomororw night to bring the body back to Paris. In response to a trans-Atlantic telephone request from American members of the family, he will act in their behalf in any impending legal proceedings.

Loeb arranged the divorce and remarriage of the Nixon-Nirdlingers after their estrangement in 1926.

EX-WIVES APPEAR

LOS ANGELES, March 14.—(INS.)—The tragedy of the death of Frederick G. Nixon-Nirdlinger, wealthy New York and Philadelphia showman, who was shot by his third wife, Charlotte Isabel Nash, beauty winner, at their French villa, echoed in California today with the discovery here of Nirdlinger's two divorced wives.

The former wives are Mrs. Theresa Nirdlinger, who lives at Beverly Hills, and Mrs. Lura B. Nirdlinger, who far a year has lived at Coronado.

Hints that Nirdlinger had been unhappy with Charlotte Nash, his third mate, and might effect a reconciliation with Mrs. Lura Nirdlinger, were disclosed by Mrs. Harry McKenna, sister-in-law of Lura, here today.

Both women admitted Nirdlinger had held extensive correspondence with Lura during the past year, and Lura said she still was a beneficiary under Nirdlinger's will and name in his life insurance policies.

AUDIT PROGRESSES

Progress was being made in the auditing of records in the Department of Supplies. Auditors intimated they have reached a point where startling developments are expected but refuse to reveal them at this time.

A test case to determine the legality of Council in paying for the rugs provided without bids for Mayor Charles H. Kline's office was being given consideration by some persons active in the audit, it was understood.

In the meantime, "tips" from various sources were being received by Assistant District Attorney William R. Colvin, who has been assigned to watch the audit, the League of Women Voters committee and members of the Citizens' Committee. Some information has materially aided the investigation, according to committee members.

It was reported the scope of the audit has been widened to include the methods used in the controller's office.

KERR'S DEFENSE

Controller Kerr, in defending his position in signing warrants to pay for various purchases in the Department of Supplies, quoted an opinion of the State Supreme Court which holds that the Controller is merely the bookkeeper of the city and has no discretion to refuse to countersign warrants legally issued.

Dr. Kerr said:

"If I knew that any contracts before me were illegal, or that there was any evidence of fraud, I would refuse to sign warrants for payment, even though the decision says I am only the bookkeeper and must do so."

Dr. Kerr declared he was opposed to the suggestion of carrying the audit to records back as far as 1914. The audit is costing the city $100 daily, he said.

City Council will face the matter of passing on the request for another public hearing tomorrow. The request of former Controller Henry O. Evans for a hearing on the public works department will be introduced, it is said. Since Director Edward G. Lang has publicly expressed a desire that the request be granted, it is thought possible Council will take favorable action.

FETE TO HONOR BURCHFIELD ON 60TH BIRTHDAY

Testimonial Arranged for Horne Department Store Head and Civic Leader

A testimonial dinner honoring Albert Horne Burchfield, president of the Joseph Horne Company, on his sixtieth birthday, will be held in the main ballroom of Hotel William Penn, Saturday, April 4, according to plans announced today by T. Clifton Jenkins, chairman of the executive committee.

The committee intends that the event shall be in the nature of a real "home-town" gathering, at which the citizenship of Pittsburgh may express their admiration for Mr. Burchfield, and has opened offices at 1924 Farmers Bank Building for the purpose of centralizing reservations.

BORN IN ALLEGHENY

Mr. Burchfield was born in Allegheny, April 6, 1871, a son of the late Maj. A. P. Burchfield and Sara J. McWhinney. Entering the service of the Pittsburgh Dry Goods Company, then the wholesale department of the Joseph Horne Company, after graduating from the public schools, Mr. Burchfield began his career in which he has risen not only to the foremost ranks in Pittsburgh, but in the country.

Vitally interested in civic affairs, Mr. Burchfield is active in a number of civic movements. He is co-author of the Morse-Burchfield plan for flood control, traffic and parking relief and a member of the Pittsburgh Flood Commission and Metropolitan Plan Commission.

FORMER MERCHANTS' HEAD

He is a former president of the Retail Merchants' Association and is active in other mercantile organizations.

Universal Service.

BUENOS AIRES, March 14.—Great Britain today began her greatest trade drive when the Prince of Wales threw a golden electrical switch that opened wide the gates of the British Empire Trade Exhibition in Palermo Park.

President Uriburu, of Argentina, headed the list of the 1,500 distinguished invited guests who heard the Prince dedicate the exhibition with the wish that the "trade show" would cement Anglo-Argentinian relations and relieve "in some measure" the general business depression.

Back in Great Britain, whence came the Prince of Wales and his brother, Prince George, as official representatives of the King-Emperor and the British government, millions of people probably unconsciously offered up a prayer that the exhibition would institute a new era in British trade, which in the last decade has suffered great setbacks.

Spread all over Palermo Park in booths and buildings, are examples of all manufactures and machines of all Britain's branches of industry, the whole valued at more than $20,000,000. The exhibit includes everything from cameras to airplanes, while evidence of Britain's might on the seas was supplied by a detachment of British warships in the harbor.

One sad note in the day's ceremonies, however, was the fact that only about 60 per cent of the exhibits and buildings were in readiness.

Bombing of Trolley Stirs Buenos Aires

BUENOS AIRES, March 14.—The explosion of a bomb in a trolley car on one of the central thoroughfares of the capital today killed two passengers and seriously injured five others.

The explosion threw the central business section, in holiday attire for the opening of the British trade exhibition by the Prince of Wales, into a turmoil.

The Prince of Wales and Prince George were in another part of the city, far from the scene of the bombing.

of reported opposition by the city administration in Pittsburgh, was referred to the committee for further consideration. The bill is one of three introduced in the Legislature.

An open forum will be held by the Civic Club of Allegheny County in the William Penn Hotel, Thursday. Walter J. Millard, of the National Municipal League, will discuss the merits of the city manager bill. The meeting will be open to all interested parties. The club is seeking a speaker to present the opposition side of the question.

WEIL TO SPEAK

Attorney A. Leo Weil, vice president of the National Municipal League, which drafted the first city manager plan of government in America, will discuss the merits of the proposed legislation before members of the municipal affairs committee of the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce, Tuesday noon. The experience of 400 cities now operating under the plan will be explained by Attorney Weil.

The Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce is contemplating action upon the measure.

Mr. Snell said that plans for the delegation were to be outlined at a meeting of the board of directors of the Allied Boards of Trade at 4 o'clock Tuesday afternoon.

DEWEY'S SON FIGHTS WILL

WASHINGTON, March 14.—(Universal.)—The $765,083.15 estate of Mrs. Mildred McLean Dewey, widow of Admiral George Dewey of Manila Bay fame, became involved in litigation today a few minutes after her four wills were filed in District Supreme Court.

Her stepson, George Goodwin Dewey, of Chicago, who was cut off without a cent in the final will, filed a caveat in an attempt to establish an earlier will which left him the bulk of the estate.

Dewey, who was the only son of the late admiral, charged his stepmother was mentally incompetent when she signed the last will on May 2, 1925, that fraud and undue influence had been exercised on her by "a certain person or persons" whom he could not identify.

It was revealed today that Mrs. Dewey had drawn wills dated August 10, 1900; October 25, 1923; April 22, 1925, and May 2, 1925, and a codicil four days later.

Through his attorneys, Dewey asks that the court appoint a collector of the estate until the contest has been settled.

According to the petition, Mrs. Dewey's estate consisted of $272,380 in bonds, $254,056 in stocks, $70,000 in real estate notes and nearly $30,000 in jewelry and household effects. She also owned the home here valued at $126,650.

RESEARCH WORK TO BE FINANCED BY KAUFMANNS

First Merchandising Firm To Join Mellon Institute On Parity With Industry.

Dr. E. R. Weidlein, director of Mellon Institute of Industrial Research, announced yesterday that Kaufmann Department Stores had been added to the roll of donors of the institute and had established the Commodity Standards Fellowship.

Dr. Labarthe

The fellowship is designed to improve and codify through scientific research the standards of all types of merchandise and to subserve by pre-planning the processes of buying and selling merchandise.

Dr. Jules Labarthe will be the first incumbent of the fellowship. He is 30, has been associated with the Institute since 1922 and has been trained in several fields of research, notably in those having to do with ceramic materials and waxes.

The announcement said that this is the first time a strictly merchandising organization had been invited to come into the institute on an equal footing with industrial and manufacturing interests. The membership comes after five years of negotiation between Mr. Weidlein and Edgar J. Kaufmann, president of the stores.

The train will leave the Pennsylvania Station at 7:30 o'clock; East Liberty, 7:41; Greensburg, 8:17; Torrance, 8:39; Johnstown, 9.10; Altoona, 10:05; Harrisburg, 1 p. m. In Harrisburg there will be a committee hearing in the House on the bill. The delegations will parade from the station to the Capitol.

The Chamber of Comerce will be represented by two committees, the recreation and the municipal affairs committees. William S. Haddock will be spokesman for the first. Donald J. Howard, manager of the municipal affairs committee, estimated that 15 representatives of the chamber would be on hand.

The sportsmen will have as their spokesman former Gov. John K. Tener, Arthur Couch, chairman of the sports committee, announced.

The Association for the Modification of the Blue Laws of 1794 will be represented by Wilmer M. Jacoby, treasurer, and Mrs. George P. Bassett, Jr., a member of the executive committee.

The bill which the delegation favors was introduced by Assemblyman M. A. Musmanno, of Stowe Township. It provides local option in legalizing Sunday amusements.

Two Ask $35,000 In Traffic Mishaps

Frank R. Wilkerson asked $20,000 damages for injuries in a traffic collision in a suit against the Pittsburgh Railways Company and the North Side Laundry Company filed in Common Pleas Court. He averred he was a passenger in a street car which collided with a laundry truck in California avenue, May 12, last.

John Berola, of Library, asked $15,000 damages for injuries in a suit against J. S. Oehrie, of Monongahela City, averring that he was struck by defendant's automobile while walking along the Library road in Snowden Township, November 30, last.

SOPRANO 'FIND' ARRIVES TO SING

Lily Pons, petite coloratura soprano, who has been the season's sensation at the Metropolitan Opera in New York, arrived in Pittsburgh yesterday morning, accompanied by her husband, August Mesritz.

She will sing at a concert in Carnegie Music Hall Monday night. Pittsburgh will be the third American city to hear her voice.

In an audition before Gatti-Casazza last March Miss Pons sang arias from Lucia, Rigolette and Lakme.

Gatti-Casazza telephoned for Otto Kahn. She sang again. Then Gatti-Casazza said:

"Shake hands with your manager."

Miss Pons graduated from Le Conservatoire de la Musique de Paris in three years at the age of 16. She studied singing under Alberti, a Spaniard, in Paris. She designs all her own opera costumes.

Dropping into her native French tongue when excited, her husband translates her enthusiasm for America. Through him she said:

SHRINERS BAN SUNDAY FILMS

There will be no Sunday night motion pictures at Syria Mosque, as a result of action taken by the executive committee of Syria Temple, it was announced today by Karl R. Hammers, Chief Rabban. The action was taken following an announcement March 6 by Dr. Thomas M. Heard, Jr., potenate that a motion picture party for members would be held tonight at the Mosque.

It was later brought to Dr. Heard's attention that such entertainment is not permitted under the imperial code of the organization. Among the Shriners who protested against Sunday pictures, was Dr. W. W. T. Duncan, pastor of Emory Methodist Episcopal Church, who wrote to Dr. Heard:

"I recognize the fact that your plan would not in any wise violate the Sunday law, and yet if you put on moving pictures on Sunday nights, it tends to a degree of secularization and encourages those who are eager to bring Sunday night motion pictures to our city for commercial purposes only."

Expect Armstrong To See Sunday Film In McKees Rocks

County Commissioner Joseph G. Armstrong has accepted an invitation to attend a Sunday motion picture show at the Roxian Theater, McKees Rocks, according to Herman Shulgold, manager. The regular program will be supplemented by the showing of motion pictures of the new Ohio boulevard and the progress being made upon the construction of the new McKees Rocks Bridge, spanning the Ohio River, Shulgold said.

A paid admission will be charged and tickets will be sold at the box office, Shulgold said.

Commissioner Armstrong said yesterday afternoon that he was not certain that he would attend the show. He said the invitation had been issued to him and Mrs. Armstrong by Miles Bryan, of McKees Rocks. He said he was under the impresion that the show was to be a benefit for the unemployed and that a collection would be taken.

HOOVER LAUDS JOB PLAN HERE

The Pittsburgh Plan for the stabilization of employment was described by President Hoover as being the best of the many plans called to his attention, Edgar J. Kaufmann, a member of the Allegheny County Emergency Association, and one of the originators of the plan said yesterday.

Kaufmann called upon the President at the White House Friday and informed his associates here of his interview in a long-distance telephone conversation from Atlantic City. He was introduced to President Hoover by United States Senator James J. Davis.

The President was gratified to learn that the Pittsburgh Plan had awakened so much interest in other parts of the United States, and that the business community of Pittsburgh and various municipalities in Allegheny County were working so heartily in co-operation to make the plan a success, Mr. Kaufmann said.

M'GOVERN FIRM IN HALL FIGHT

On the ground that the price of the Nicola site for a Town Hall is extortionate, County Commissioner Charles C. McGovern yesterday reiterated that his colleagues would have to take him into court before he would sign the debt statement in connection with the issuance of bonds to buy it. He said:

"The men responsible for having the Town Hall idea inserted into the bond issue are the ones who will profit by it. Originally the owners wanted $10 a square foot for the property, and reduced it to $8 because of that attitude against its purchase.

"They will now have to reduce it $6 more for the reason that property can be bought right next to it for $2 a square foot. If my colleagues want to take me into court, well and good, but they will have to take me all the way. I will defend my action on the ground that it is extortion."

DEMOCRAT HITS APPROPRIATION OF 10 BILLIONS

Senator Harris, of Georgia, Says Time for Warning; Outlay Defended by Jones

WASHINGTON, March 14.—(AP)—Appropriations by the recent Congress were described today by a Democrat as a saturnalia of extravagance of the Republican administration, and by a Republican as "a normal increase."

These views were expressed by Senator Harris, of Georgia, ranking Democrat on the Appropriations Committee, and Senator Jones, Republican, Washington, chairman of the committee.

Harris said the appropriation of $10,246,819,000 warranted "the condemnation of the people of the country" and marked the arrival of a time "when a warning should be sounded in no uncertain tones."

"CAREFUL INQUIRY"

Jones said the appropriations had been made "only after the most searching and careful consideration" and pointed to the growth of the country and the broadening of governmental activities as reasons for the increase.

He said the appropriations at the past session were $5,180,107,622 which, with funds voted at the first two sessions, made a total for the entire Congress of $10,041,000,000.

The total appropriations during the two years of the Congress, Harris said, "means a tax of about $81 on every one of the 122,735,000 people in the United States and a tax of about $405 on every family."

Jones replied the appropriations at the last session were made with a view to meeting the drought and unemployment emergencies and carrying out veterans' legislation enacted at the previous session.

"HANDOUTS TO INTERESTS"

Meanwhile, Senator McKellar (Dem.), Tennessee, issued a statement charging the administration with "passing on gratuities to the prosperous and powerful interests" of $675,000,000 annually.

His list of "gratuities" included:

"Ocean mail contract subsidy, $36,600,000; air mail contract subsidy, $20,750,000; railroad subsidy on postal transportation, $55,833,000; aircraft subsidy, Department of Commerce, $9,992,842; tax refunds, $85,246,642; Federal Farm Board, for speculation and in competition with private business, $250,000,000; battleships, $30,000,000; United States Shipping Board, $37,406,000, and United States Fleet Corporation, $50,000,000."

McKellar advocated abolition of the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation.

SWAPPING MAKE-UPS

Charlie Chaplin — George Robey

'RED' FLOGGING LAID TO KLAN

KANSAS CITY, March 14.—(AP.)—Paul Cline, Communist party district organizer, today charged members of the Ku Klux Klan with abducting and flogging Lewis Hurst and C. J. Coder, Communist organizers, at Dallas, Tex., last Thursday. He alleged the police had connived with the mob.

Cline said Hurst and Coder had reached Kansas City yesterday and were under the care of a physician in private homes here, recovering from a beating administered by "14 armed Klansmen," who, he said, kidnaped them as they were released from jail.

Both men intend to return to Dallas to continue their work, the organizer declared, as soon as they have recovered.

CHAPLIN IN RED ROW IN BERLIN

BERLIN, March 14.—(INS.)—Through no fault of his own Charlie Chaplin, the famous film comedian, became involved in a controversy with extreme sections of the German press today.

The Communist press started the trouble by quoting Chaplin as sympathizing with Communist youth. This aroused the ire of the Nationalists and Fascists, bitter enemies of the Communists, and the columns of praise all newspapers have been running for the screen star gave way today to a heated discussion of his political principles.

Time and again since he arrived here Chaplin has insisted he "does not know anything about politics." He made this statement to a delegation of unemployed motion picture workers and musicians who called to see him.

The Nationalist newspaper Boersen Zeitung, however, took a definite stand on the matter and dug up his famous comedy "Shoulder Arms" as alleged evidence of the film star's political leanings. Chaplin said:

"I never have discussed and know nothing whatever about politics in Germany, England, the United States or anywhere else.

"But I do favor a six-hour day and a five-day week as a remedy to world unemployment."

Pinchot involving the eventual removal from Mt. Gretna to near Grantville of the National Guard training camp site.

It was understood that most of the members of the commission gave their approval to the report informally.

Natrona Man, Hurt In Auto Crash, Dies

Joseph Grabus, 43, of Karns road, Natrona, died yesterday afternoon in the Allegheny Valley Hospital of injuries received in an automobile truck crash last Wednesday on the River road, near Natrona, police say.

CALVERT CASE HEARING LISTED

The hearing of the disbarment action against Attorney George H. Calvert by a special committee of the Board of Governance of the Pennsylvania Bar Association, postponed because of his ill health, is listed for Thursday in the rooms of the Allegheny County Bar Association.

Calvert is charged with mishandling the $3,500,000 estate of Mrs. Eleanor Davidson. He and former Judge Henry G. Wasson were appointed a committee for her estate after she was adjudged mentally incompetent. Hearing of the charges against Calvert was scheduled in November last and continued after an examination by physicians substantiated the plea of his attorneys that he was in ill health.

Roper, Former Coach At Princeton, Boomed For Mayor of Phila.

PHILADELPHIA, March 14.—(AP.)—The controversy between Councilmen Charles B. Hall and William W. Roper on the one side, and Mayor Harry A. Mackey and Director Lemuel B. Schofield on the other, over enforcement of the prohibition law in Philadelphia, was regarded in some quarters today as having projected itself into the coming mayoralty election.

As the mayor reiterated his stand supporting the enforcement policy of Director Schofield, Hall declared that Roper's campaign against the director has carried Roper to the fore in the field of candidates to succeed Mayor Mackey. Roper has just retired as football coach at Princeton.

Mayor Mackey, in reply to Councilman Hall's statement that he "wonders why the mayor retains Schofield," said:

"Let him wonder."

SKIDMORE CASE TRIAL MONDAY

Giving up hope that the police will capture George C. Skidmore and Henry White, wanted for the murder of Charles Hammon, crippled gasoline station attendant, at any near date, the district attorney's office has listed the third man indicted for the murder, Eugene Batdorf, for trial Monday. Skidmore and White will be tried when captured.

Leonard Skidmore, brother of George, and Frederick Dutton, are listed for trial on charges of being accessories after the fact of murder. Leonard was discovered in the act of carrying food to George Skidmore, who had been hidden in an isolated hunting camp in the mountains of Center County. George shot his way through the line of approaching officers, and his trail has been lost.

Auburn Offers Exclusive Free Wheeling Advantages

One is illustrated above; freedom from constant work of de-clutching. With the Auburn you can shift all three forward speeds without putting your foot on the clutch, (an exclusive Auburn advantage).

Another is the lockout feature. A little lever on the floor enables you to have your Auburn either completely in Free Wheeling or completely in positive gear. No changing constantly from one to the other.

Another advantage: the Auburn Free Wheeling takes hold with a smooth, velvety action; no jerking or slipping.

Another: the Auburn Free Wheeling unit is more simple and durable. Another: it is not affected by climatic conditions.

These exclusive advantages are typical of the car in its entirety. In every part of the new Auburn Straight Eight, features not found on any other car, such as: X-type cross member in frame, widest rear seat of any production car; widest door; 61 inch rear tread; and shortest turning radius of any car of comparable length. This new Auburn is the only car to have all three transmission improvements; Constant Mesh, Silent Mesh and Free Wheeling. See this most remarkable car; inspect it critically; compare it carefully; drive it. Discover for yourself the extraordinary value it offers; how much it gives for so little money.

VILLAGERS FLEE MOUNTAIN SLIP

CHAMBERY, France, March 14.—(INS.)—Army engineers pitted technical skill against a sliding mountain mass near here today to halt its juggernaut downhill march over helpless communities and fertile fields of French Savoy.

The rolling mass of millions of cubic yards of earth, rock and snow already has swallowed four villages, scattering its inhabitants in terror. The large town of Granges now faces the approaching menace, with authorities evacuating the populace.

The engineers planned to halt the landslide by splitting its movement and diverting parts of it into a mountain torrent, which would carry it away. To accomplish this necessitates the destruction of several bridges.

Torrential rains caused the break-off from a nearby mountain, starting a mud wall some 50 feet high straight down into the valley. For the first few hours the mass rolled down at a speed of 300 feet an hour.

Its progress warned villagers
Its progress warned villagers, who were ordered to flee. Alpine guards and gendarmes supervised the evacuation of the several villages, the populace taking livestock and possessions with them.

BOLT FORECAST BY WHEELER IF RASKOB RULES

Montana Senator Talks Of Third Party; Sees Hope For Party in Roosevelt

In calling upon Progressive Democrats to take control, Wheeler made it plain that his suggested revolt is directed against the economic platform which Chairman John J. Raskob recently proposed to the national committee.

SCORES RASKOB

He said:

"In order to win, the Democrats must throw over most of the economies platform proposed by Mr. Raskob. The candidate will have to be favorable to the direct primary.

"No candidate will get very far among the Progressives by advocating repeal of the direct primary or by trying to place prohibition ahead of economic conditions as the paramount issue."

Although originally a prohibitionist, Wheeler recently came out in favor of modification. Nevertheless, he is opposed to making the liquor question a smoke screen to conceal other issues.

Gov. Roosevelt was likewise described as a "very formidable candidate" for the presidency by Senator Brookhart (Rep.), of Iowa, who also attended the progressive conference. He added, however, that Roosevelt was not quite as "progressive" as he would like him to be on some issues.

Brookhart said the Democratic party was no temptation to him as long as Raskob remained in control, and agreed with Wheeler that a "third party" movement was possible.

Brookhart declared he is unwilling as yet to concede the renomination of President Hoover by the Republicans.

HOOVER TO FIGHT

With Congress out of session until next fall, President Hoover apparently is going to take his case to the country. Today's announcement of his speeches gave his schedule only until mid-June. There is projected after that a trip that will carry him to the Pacific Coast.

The "unpopularity" of the administration, as it is politically phrased, is quite generally accepted as a fact in political quarters. The Democrats gleefully proclaim it. The Republicans contend that this unpopularity is due to forces and circumstances entirely outside Mr. Hoover's power to control. But there it is, whatever the cause, and it is admittedly a condition that must be overcome in the next 12 months if the party is going to enter the 1932 battle with any degree of confidence.

The slogan is to be:

"Times are hard, but they would have been far worse except for the administration at Washington."

It is noted, too, that three of Mr. Hoover's speeches are to be in that territory where the heaviest Republican losses were suffered in the last election—Ohio, Indiana and Illinois.

HER BIG MAN OF IRON!

"Mr. Vocalite" Miss Rosalind Palmer

EMBARRASSED?—The newest iron man, a robot called the most advanced ever developed, showing aplomb in a situation new to him. He was built in East Pittsburgh.

LATEST ROBOT ON EXHIBITION

"Mr. Vocalite," a robot said to be the most advanced yet developed, has been designed and constructed by J. M. Barnett, engineer of the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company. The "man" is now on exhibition in St. Louis.

The spoken instructions to "Mr. Vocalite" are transmitted through an ordinary telephone mouthpiece. However, there are no electrical connections between this transmitter and the mechanical "brain" of the robot. The electrical impulses caused by the spoken orders are carried by a beam of light to a sensitive cell which relays them to the mechanical man's "thinking" mechanism.

Barnett pointed out that robot devices involving similar principles are being used to protect banks against robbery, to read temperatures inside steel furnaces and to turn on electric signs.

CHICAGO SLAYER GIVEN 14 YEARS

CHICAGO, March 14.—(AP.)—William (Three Fingered Jack) White, robber and gangster, was convicted today of the murder of Policeman Edward Pflaume, of Forest Park. The jury fixed the penalty at 14 years in prison.

The verdict robbed the Chicago underworld of another notorious criminal, but the punishment was lighter than that assessed at his first trial. Sentenced to death for the murder five years ago, he won a reversal in the Supreme Court.

The case lingered on the docket until White was listed by the Chicago crime commission as one of the 28 "public enemies," and the murder charge was revived in the campaign to rid Chicago of criminals.

The trial of Leo V. Brothers, of St. Louis, for the murder of Alfred (Jake) Lingle, Tribune reporter, was set today for Monday.

1 DEAD AS 1,100 PRISONERS RIOT IN JOLIET PEN

they march to their cells to be locked up for the day, as is the practice on Saturday.

BEGIN TO BOO

Suddenly, as if they had rehearsed, the men started shouting and booing. The din could be heard throughout the prison. At first, the guards attempted to quiet them, but were jostled around. Tables were overturned and dishes thrown about wildly.

Alarmed, the guards retreated to their galleries and sent word to the office of Warden Harry Hill. Some of the guards attempted to leave the hall, but the convicts, who began milling about, blocked the doors.

Meanwhile, other guards armed with riot guns, shot guns and tear gas bombs, were hurrying across the prison yard toward the center of the riot. Still others were ordered to mount the walls, standing by to shoot any convict who might attempt to scale them. None did.

CAPTAIN TRAMPLED

The first shots were fired when a group of guards reached the hall entrance just as three shouting convicts appeared with Capt. Davenport as a prisoner. In view of the guards, they threw the captain to the floor and jumped on his body. He suffered a broken arm and probable internal injuries.

The guards fired. The trio fell wounded.

Bedlam increased inside the mess room. Guards who managed to get in were jostled back and forth, not daring to shoot. Finally, with a great shout, most of the milling men started for the door, and into the yards.

There they circled about, shouting wildly. If any had planned to escape then, they changed their minds when the wall guards began shooting in the air. By sheer force, the guards, by this time reinforced by highway and Joliet city police, succeeded after nearly an hour of struggle in getting the prisoners within the walls of the cellhouses.

START FACTORY FIRE

Sixty of the leaders ran for the kitchen. Leaving it thoroughly wrecked, they went on to the dining hall, smashing furniture, tearing tables and chairs from the concrete floor and hurling them through windows. Two fiber furniture shops were also demolished and a fire was started in one cell house, but was quickly extinguished. The limestone cell blocks, although 75 years old, are virtually fireproof. Eventually all prisoners were subdued.

All four convicts who were shot were sentenced from Chicago. Yarbeck, 23, the dead man, was sent up May 7, 1929, for assault with intent to rob. Joseph Kwoka, 20, a life termer for robbery, may die. George Jakowanis, 24, admitted for robbery, and Michael Kasseli, 41, admitted after conviction as a bomb salesman, were not seriously wounded.

Forty-three ringleaders were locked up tonight in solitary confinement, with irons on hands and feet.

The riot spoiled the Saturday afternoon half-holiday for the prisoners and gave 25 visitors in the Administration Building a panicky hour. Several women among them became hysterical as they waited to learn the fate of relatives and friends within.

More than 1,000 men and women are expected to attend the luncheon and dinner to be held Tuesday under the auspices of the National Forward Movement of the Anti-Saloon League, according to Dr. William P. McGarey, assistant to Dr. P. Scott McBride, national superintendent of the league, on his arrival here yesterday to aid in completing plans for the two events.

Commander John D. Pennington, former Federal prohibition commissioner in the Pittsburgh district, is to speak at both meetings. The luncheon will be held in the Fort Pitt Hotel Tuesday. The dinner will be held in McCreery's dining room at 6:30 o'clock. Dr. Ernest H. Cherrington, Washington, D. C., general secretary of the World League Against Alcoholism, will also speak.

The meetings are part of a series of "1,000 dry dinners" being held in different parts of the country in the interest of a campaign to raise $1,000,000 to defray the expenses of an educational movement. Dr. William A. (Billy) Sunday and others are in the field aiding the League's campaign of education.

AUTO, TROLLEY HIT, 2 INJURED

Edward Stalder, Spring street, was injured, probably fatally, and Francis Nath, 2226 Spring street, suffered a fractured skull, when a car driven, police said, by Stalder crashed into a westbound Arlington avenue street car at Spring street, late yesterday. Nath was a passenger in the auto.

According to witnesses, Stalder, eastbound, appeared to lose control of the auto as he neared the street car. Motorman Ed McCaffrey brought the street car to an emergency stop as the auto careened against it. Traffic was tied up for about eight minutes, Pittsburgh Railway officials said.

OHIO GIRL TELLS OF THRILLING RECORD FLIGHT

Terse Notes Scribbled While Hitting 31,000 Feet Reveal Hazards at 40 Below Zero

By G. EVERETT DOYING
International News Service

AKRON, O., March 14.—A group of notes, mere cryptic phrases hastily scrawled on bits of cardboard today vividly described the thrilling details of the gruelling and seemingly successful flight of Miss Frankie Renner, pretty Akron aviatrix, to set a new world's altitude record for women.

Brief to the extent of being merely a dozen words or so, jotted down at intervals during the bitter four-hour battle against the law of gravity, these notes were transformed into realistic experiences of the flight when amplified by the daring flier during an exclusive interview with International News Service.

LOST IN CLOUDS

Comfortably seated in her home a few minutes after the flight had ended at 5:46 p. m. yesterday, Frankie said she was confident her sealed barograph would register at least 31,000 feet.

If correct, she will have smashed the present women's altitude mark of 27,418 feet by more than two-thirds of a mile. The barograph was sent to the United States Bureau of Standards at Washington today by Lieut. T. W. G. Settle for official reading.

Most dramatic of the dozen notations jotted on the strips of cardboard which had been tied to Miss Renner's flying suit was this one-word notation made at 3 o'clock—little more than an hour after she left the ground:

"Lost."

Circling over Kent, O., at 20,000 feet, the daring woman explained that she suddenly flew into cloud strata which obscured the earth and sun. She recalled:

"For more than 10 minutes I was completely lost, and then the plane outrode the cloud layer."

40 BELOW ZERO

On another bit of cardobard, written at 28,000 feet, was:

"Meters dead."

Because the meters froze and broke, Miss Benner could only estimate her actual altitude from then on. When the meter broke, however, she already had unofficially broken the record of Elinor Smith, New York aviatrix, by 600 feet. Miss Renner said:

"It will be impossible to know definitely what height I reached until the barograph is opened, but after the instruments broke I climbed for nearly two hours longer."

The last notation, written shortly before five o'clock, said:

"Bitterly cold; goggles frozen."

After the flight Miss Renner said the temperature when that note was written was easily 40 degrees below zero.

During the entire flight the plane, a Waco straight-winged biplane, propelled by a 240-horsepower Wright Whirlwind motor, functioned perfectly, she said.

GIRL MILL HAND WINS $38,303

NEW BEDFORD, Mass., March 14.—(INS.)—"Lucky" Mary L. Pacheco's dream of wealth came true this afternoon.

Mary, 23, an operative in a local textile mill, last month purchased a $1 ticket in a Canadian World War Veterans' Horse Racing pool, based on a sweepstake race in Havana.

Later, she received word from St. Johns, N. B., that she had won $38,303.66. Mary watched and waited but the money did not come.

Today a check arrived in the mails, which had been delayed by bad storms in New Brunswick.

Mary promptly resigned her post in the mill. Her father and elder brother will continue to work there.

Some of Mary's winnings, she said, will go toward the support of her mother, four sisters and two other brothers.

Sloppy Joe's Robbed Of $1,500 in Tips

HAVANA, March 14.—(INS.)—"Sloppy Joe's Bar," favorite hangout for American tourists visiting Havana, was held up and robbed today of a sum estimated at $1,500.

The robbers missed the night's "receipts" of the establishment, which had been locked up in a safe before the raiders arrived. The $1,500 loot comprised the "tips" for the waiters, which was cached in a rear room.

Shaw, Gene Tunney Dine in Jerusalem

The fighter has long been an admirer of Shaw's writings and they have met upon several occasions in the past.

METER AWARD UP FOR HEARING

The right of the city to award contracts for water meters to a high bidder will be argued before the Pennsylvania Supreme Court, convening tomorrow for its spring session here, among 72 appeals listed for the first two weeks, all from western counties.

Former United States Senator George Wharton Pepper will argue the appeal of the taxpayer's suit by Edward E. Pearlman against the City of Pittsburgh and the Pittsburgh Equitable Meter Company. He will be associated with Attorney H. D. Hirsh. Common Pleas Court refused an injunction to prevent performance of the contract for meters.

The bid of the Neptune Meter Company was 42 cents per meter lower than the Pittsburgh Equitable bid, involving, according to counsel, about $12,000 difference on 25,000 meters expected to be supplied city consumers during the next few years. The Neptune bid was ignored by the city under an unusual contention that it was "unbalanced" and this question will be argued on appeal. The appeal is listed for hearing at the head of the list Friday.

The session is the first Pittsburgh hearing at which Chief Justice Robert S. Frazer will preside. Only six justices will sit, due to the unfilled vacancy caused by the recent death of Justice Sylvester B. Sadler, of Carlisle.

Son Left Bulk Of $205,000 Estate

The bulk of the estate of Mrs. Agnes McKean Stewart, Northumberland street, valued at $205,000, was left to her son, Sidney Andrew Stewart, according to her will filed for probate yesterday. Other bequests were: John F. Stewart, a nephew, $3,000; Mary M. Thompson, a sister, $5,000; William R. McKean, a brother, $2,000, and $1,000 to Mary A. Kramer.

Mrs. Katherine Egar, of McKeesport, left her estate, valued at $40,000, to her six children.

BIRTH CONTROL DISCUSSION LED BY EDUCATORS

Question is Presented from Variety of Viewpoints at Rally of County League.

The question of birth control from the viewpoints of a sociologist, a psychologist and columnist were presented last night to an audience of about 100 in the William Penn Hotel under auspices of the Birth Control League of Allegheny County.

The speakers were Dr. George A. Lundberg and Dr. Florence M. Teagarden, both of the University of Pittsburgh, and Mrs. Florence Fisher Parry, of the Pittsburgh Press.

Dr. Roswell Johnson, of the University of Pittsburgh, although not scheduled to speak, was there to answer questions, and incidentally, to draw a fine line of distinction between the words "control" and "prevention." Every birth control proponent is alive to and disturbed by the fact that birth control is and always will be abused, he remarked.

PSYCHOLOGIST SPEAKS

In her talk on "What a Psychologist Sees in the Reduction of the Size of Families," Dr. Teagarden declared delinquents usually were children of large families; that "superiority gets mixed up with the small-sized family;" that from small families more children grow up wanting to establish homes and families of their own and that the old belief that "the only child is a disease" has passed. Tests have shown that "only children" are likely to be leaders and superior in many particulars, she said. Recent study, she said, also disproves another old belief—that later children are the most intelligent.

Whether there is to be population control is not the question, Dr. Lundberg asserted. The real issue is whether it shall be scientifically controlled or whether it will be done by war, pestilence, famine and infanticide; whether scientific means shall be adopted to prevent surplus life or whether the old barbarous methods of destroying it after it has come into being shall continue.

"CORRECTS" NATURE

The argument that birth control is contrary to nature and, therefore, undesirable is clearly fallacious, Dr. Lundberg declared. He contended that every achievement of civilization which raises man above the lower animals has been accomplished through interference with nature, and that man's continued advance depends on the increase of such interference.

Man's progress has consisted of bringing under his control one by one the blind working of natural forces, he said. Dr. Lundberg prophesied that the majority of persons in his audience would live to see the time when religion now opposed to birth control would find it entirely in keeping with Divine will. Every forward movement in civilization has been opposed by some group of religionists, he said.

Mrs. Parry, making a dramatic plea for reproduction of the race where ancestry warranted it, sterilization where necessary and birth control only in certain cases, stressed the importance of eugenics, to which, she said, "birth control is a little, a very little sister." She demanded that the right people be made to feel the importance of having children and insisted that having children is never an economic question. Few parents could ever really "afford" to have their families, she said.

Negroes Rob Homes, Attack Women, Girl

EAST ST. LOUIS, Ill., March 14.—(AP.)—Two Negroes forced their way into three homes last night, attacked two women and a 16-year-old girl, bound and gagged a number of men, including husbands of the two women, and stole an unestimated quantity of jewelry and money.

At a fourth home which they invaded the Negroes were frightened away by an accidental revolver shot.

Reports of the crimes, the last of which was committeed about 10:45 p. m., were suppressed by East St. Louis police, but were made public by Mike Doyle, chief deputy sheriff of St. Clair County.

Wed 35 Years, Wife Gone, Gets Divorce

A marriage of 35 years ago was dissolved in Common Pleas Court Saturday when Judge Joseph Stadtfeld granted a divorce to James Hopper, 3947 Hawley avenue, from Mrs. Daisy B. Hopper, 6734 Deary street, charged with desertion 16 years ago.

They were married September 1, 1895. Hopper came home August 13, 1914, he said, and all things were taken out of the house and his wife had gone. She gave no reason for the desertion and ignored his requests for her to return, he testified. According to his testimony, he obtained a verdict of $4,000 for alienation of her affections from a man he sued.

'Clean-Up' Drive To Aid Jobless

Employment of idle men at useful tasks in improving and beautifying the homes, institutions and manufactories of this district, during the fifth annual "Clean Up-Paint Up" campaign to be carried on by the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce, from April 26 to May 9, has been urged by James Rae, president of the Chamber.

Rae stated that the subject of unemployment would be given careful consideration at a meeting of the advisory committee on the Clean Up campaign, which will meet in the chamber Wednesday noon.

CROWDS RUSH TAX OFFICES

The Saturday rush of taxpayers at the office of D. B. Heiner, collector of internal revenue, Federal building, to file their income tax returns for 1930 was heavy. To accommodate them a large force of deputy collectors and clerks were on duty and the office remained open until 9 o'clock.

Mail returns were heavier than in other years.

As in former years the heavy taxpayers are waiting until the last day for filing, which will be Monday, on account of March 15 falling on Sunday. Tomorrow the office will remain open until midnight.

$335,342 Raised By Jewish Welfare

Final figures show that 4,400 individuals and firms contributed $335,342 to the recent campaign for the Federation of Jewish Philanthropies, A. M. Oppenheimer, chairman, has announced.

The number of givers exceeds by at least 600 the high peak of 1925 when 3,800 members were enlisted as supporters, Oppenheimer said. At the outset of the appeal the number had been reduced to 1,700, and while 500 of these were unable to continue their support because of economic disasters, new friends were added to bring the list to the greatest size in the history of the Federation, he said.

CHIROPRACTOR SUIT ATTACKS STATE BOARD

Asks Licensure Department Be Barred From Enforcing Act Against Profession

An equity suit was filed yesterday in Federal Court by four chiropractors asking that the State Board of Medical Education and Licensure of the Department of Public Instruction of Pennsylvania be enjoined and restrained from interfering with the plaintiffs in pursuit of their profession until there are laws made especially regulating and governing the profession.

The defendants named in the bill of complaint are Drs. Irvin D. Metzger, president, Pittsburgh; William M. Hillegas, Philadelphia; M. V. Hazen, Harrisburg; Edgar M. Green, Easton; H. W. Albertson, Scranton; Theodore B. Appel, Harrisburg, and James N. Rule, Harrisburg, members of the board, and Dr. Charles D. Kock, secretary.

ATTACK ACT

The plaintiffs are Leo J. Steinbach, Blanche M. Ledger, Lillian P. Shook and Fred S. Cathery, all described as chiropractors in this state. They ask in the bill that the state board be restrained from enforcing the penal clause of an act of 1911 or its supplements and amendments, making it a misdemeanor to engage in medicine and surgery, unless the persons doing so have first obtained a certificate from the state board, until there are laws governing the profession of chiropractic.

CALLED ILLEGAL

The plaintiffs allege that enforcement of the penal clause of the act which provides fines and jail sentences, is unconstitutional and should be voided.

Suits have already been instituted in the state courts at Erie, Dauphin, Philadelphia and Washington counties against chiropractic practitioners, of which there are approximately 1,000 in the state.

"Pittsburgh should take advantage of the opportunity to advertise the magnitude of its industries and its commercial importance to millions of people.

"Stenciled in large letters should be the magic words, 'Pittsburgh, Pa.' on every beam of structural steel that leaves our manufacturing district. In this manner we would proclaim Pittsburgh's superiority in a hundred American cities in government work alone. It would advertise Pittsburgh throughout the world.

METHOD PRACTICAL

"The method is practical and the course of procedure would be simple. A gentleman's agreement among Pittsburgh manufacturers could be made to stencil our products. The cost would be slight—an infinitesimal outlay when compared with the value of this means of advertising Pittsburgh.

"The pioneer manufacturers in Pittsburgh—our forefathers who laid the foundation for our industrial supremacy—availed themselves of every opportunity to attract public notice to their city and to impress upon the world the value and diversity of its products. The same spirit of enthusiasm and enterprise by manufacturers today would yield a thousand-fold.

THE INTERNATIONAL Dairy Products Corporation announces regular distribution of orange juice by milk wagons and other distributing agencies. The Borden Company, which is the other big dairy concern, plans to do the same.

Ten refrigerator carloads of juice, 60,000 gallons, squeezed from 2,500,000 oranges, are on their way from Tampa, Fla., to be distributed in half-pint, pint and quart containers for home use. Frozen under a vacuum, prepared by machinery that preserves all the value of the orange, this is a most important announcement.

California, of course, with its "Sunkist" organization, and the citrus lands in Texas and elsewhere along the Gulf, will see enormously increased prosperity in the new process.

N. Y. FACTIONS MOBILIZE FOR WALKER FIGHT

Political Upheaval Seen As Thrust at Tammany; Roosevelt to Get Charges.

By JAMES L. KILGALLEN,
International News Service.

NEW YORK, March 14—With a spectacular political upheaval threatened—if not actually looming as a certainty—two important elements in the life of New York City were mobilizing their forces tonight for a battle which may prove as far-reaching in its consequences as that which dethroned "Boss" Tweed and his regime 30 years ago.

On one side were the civic organizations, churches and prominent citizens who, for the past week, have been insistently calling for a sweeping investigation of every branch of the administration of Mayor James J. Walker.

On the other was Tammany Hall, which recognizes that the determined fight on Walker is also aimed to break the power of Tammany in New York City.

WALKER SILENT

Mayor Walker, about whose head the storm is swirling, was proceeding toward California for a vacation. At Yuma, Arizona, where he was seen by an International News Service reporter, he declared he is "not running away" from New York City and refused to have anything to say about the hue and cry against him back home. He said he would get at least 10 days' rest at Palm Springs, Cal., and then return to New York and "take care of any investigations on hand."

The movement for an investigation of the government of New York City was moving forward, meanwhile, in a relentless fashion. The city affairs committee, it was announced, will present detailed charges against Mayor Walker to Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt next week. Other organizations, including that of seven leading Protestant Church denominations, are solidly behind the campaign to bring about an inquiry into the Walker regime which, it is alleged, is steeped in corruption.

Although Gov. Roosevelt has not definitely stated his attitude toward an investigation of Walker, he did step into the situation in New York a week ago today when he appointed Samuel Seabury, who has been conducting the investigation here into the magistrates' courts, to probe the official conduct of District Attorney Thomas C. T. Crain.

TAMMANY ACTIVE

Seabury accepted the appointment and today announced he had selected John Kirkland Clark, an experienced investigator of politicians in New York City, as his chief counsel to aid in the investigation of Crain. Clark, who was Charles S. Whitman's assistant district attorney, is highly touted as a prosecutor. A dramatic legal battle was forecast when Samuel Untermery today accepted an invitation to defend the district attorney.

While the civic organizations were proceeding openly and somewhat vociferously in their fight on Walker, the Tammany Hall board of strategy was operating quietly in lining up their defense. No statement was forthcoming from John F. Curry, the wigwam leader, but it is known that there has been a number of informal conferences staged by Tammany district leaders in the last few days at which the situation was gone over thoroughly from all of its various and complicated angles.

KANSAS CHAIR BILL VETOED

TOPEKA, Kan., March 14—(AP)—Gov. Harry H. Woodring vetoed today three bills passed in the Legislature providing death in the electric chair as the maximum penalty for first-degree murder and robbery with firearms in Kansas.

The governor said:

"I would be derelict in my duty and could find no excuse to my own conscience if I failed to veto legislation which I consider unsound."

The governor said he had been convinced that public opinion is overwhelmingly against the bills, adding:

"My veto on these bills is not actuated by any maudlin sympathy for the criminal. It is axiomatic that it is not the severity but the certainty of punishment that deters the criminal.

"In addition to being opposed to the principle of these bills I am convinced that there are serious objections to permitting the jury to fix the penalty instead of the court.

"If we must have capital punishment let the trained judge pass sentence of death upon the criminal."

Records show that only five executions have been carried out by the State of Kansas, the last in 1870. Capital punishment except for treason was abolished by law in 1907.

LONG-LOST SON FOUND IN JAIL

PORTSMOUTH, O., March 14—(INS.)—A mother busy hunting her lost son for 20 years had found him today—in a jail cell.

The hunt ended yesterday when Mr. and Mrs. Lorenzo Brazelton, of Kansas City Mo., discovered the youth, James Albert, 20, serving a 90-day term here for breaking into a railroad tool house.

The first act of the parents was to tell the story of their search to Sheriff Maurice J. Caldwell and arrange to pay the costs and obtain his release.

Separated from her husband shortly after the boy's birth, Mrs. Brazelton, then 15 years old, placed him in the care of a family at Louisa, Ky., she told Sheriff Caldwell. Thirteen years later, when she became reconciled with her husband, the two determined to find the son.

Young Brazelton was traced here by the parents by searching out all the "Carters" residing here. Carter was the surname of the family with whom the boy was placed soon after his birth, and he had used the name since.

Following his release Brazelton returned to Kansas City with his parents.

Fat Melts Away

MODERN science has made important recent discoveries in fat reduction. You can lose four to seven pounds a week, if you are a normal, overweight person, on a FULL STOMACH. Instead of tiring exercises and starvation, you now—through a simple substitution of foods—know never a hungry moment and YET GROW SLENDER—See your excess fat fade away safely, comfortably in a simple, healthful way. To stay fat now is folly. You can look so much better, feel so much better and enjoy life so much more fully that it's foolish not to.

WHAT YOU DO

There are just two simple things to do: Clear your system—and keep it clear of waste matter, toxins and depleting poisons with ordinary JAD SALTS obtainable at any drug store. Start with a teaspoonful in a full glass of water tomorrow morning—a sparkling and pleasant drink.

Then EAT YOUR FILL—as much as your appetite can stand—of meals consisting of the following foods:

At breakfast eat two oranges, or the juice of two oranges. Eat also two slices of toasted whole wheat or bran bread. Eat rolled oats (with milk, not cream).

At luncheon eat a good size piece of lean meat, then see how much spinach, lettuce, sauerkraut, boiled cabbage, green peas, broccoli or fresh turnips you can eat. EAT ALL YOU CAN COMFORTABLY HOLD of these foods. For dessert have any fresh fruit; cantaloupe, berries, apples, sliced oranges, pears—any except bananas. Substitute turnips for potatoes. Substitute lean meats—beef, chicken, veal, white fish, trout, bass, etc.—for pork or any fat meats.

At night, have another FILL-UP-FULL meal as above. Cut down on butter and sweets—eat half of what you eat now. That's easy. For with your stomach full of other foods, you'll never notice it. Drink water or not as you like.

4 TO 7 POUNDS GONE IN WEEK

At the end of a week, you'll see the scale down four to seven pounds—according to how much overweight you are—from what you weighed the day you started. Your health, too, will be better. You'll be more active, more vigorous than perhaps for years. Your friends will soon begin to notice your increasing slenderness. You'll soon avoid the embarrassment of being called fat or bulky. AND you'll do it with NEVER A HUNGRY MOMENT!

If in doubt about this safe and simple way, ASK ANY DOCTOR. Show him this article. Ask him whether or not it is safe and sure. It marks the latest findings of scientific men in the field of weight reduction. For it performs two necessary and important functions.

The JAD SALTS clear the bowels and system of the excessive toxins most overweight people have. *The change in diet, the FILLING OF THE STOMACH TO ITS LIMIT—with foods that turn to energy instead of fat, decreases the weight day by day. The salts build up your health. The change in food eases off the fat.

Start today. Clip this dietary out and save it. Get big package of ordinary JAD SALTS for the cleansing part of the method at any drug store. A large bottle costs less than a dollar.

*Note particularly the salts are urged purely as a poison banishing agent not as a reducing. The change in food does the work.

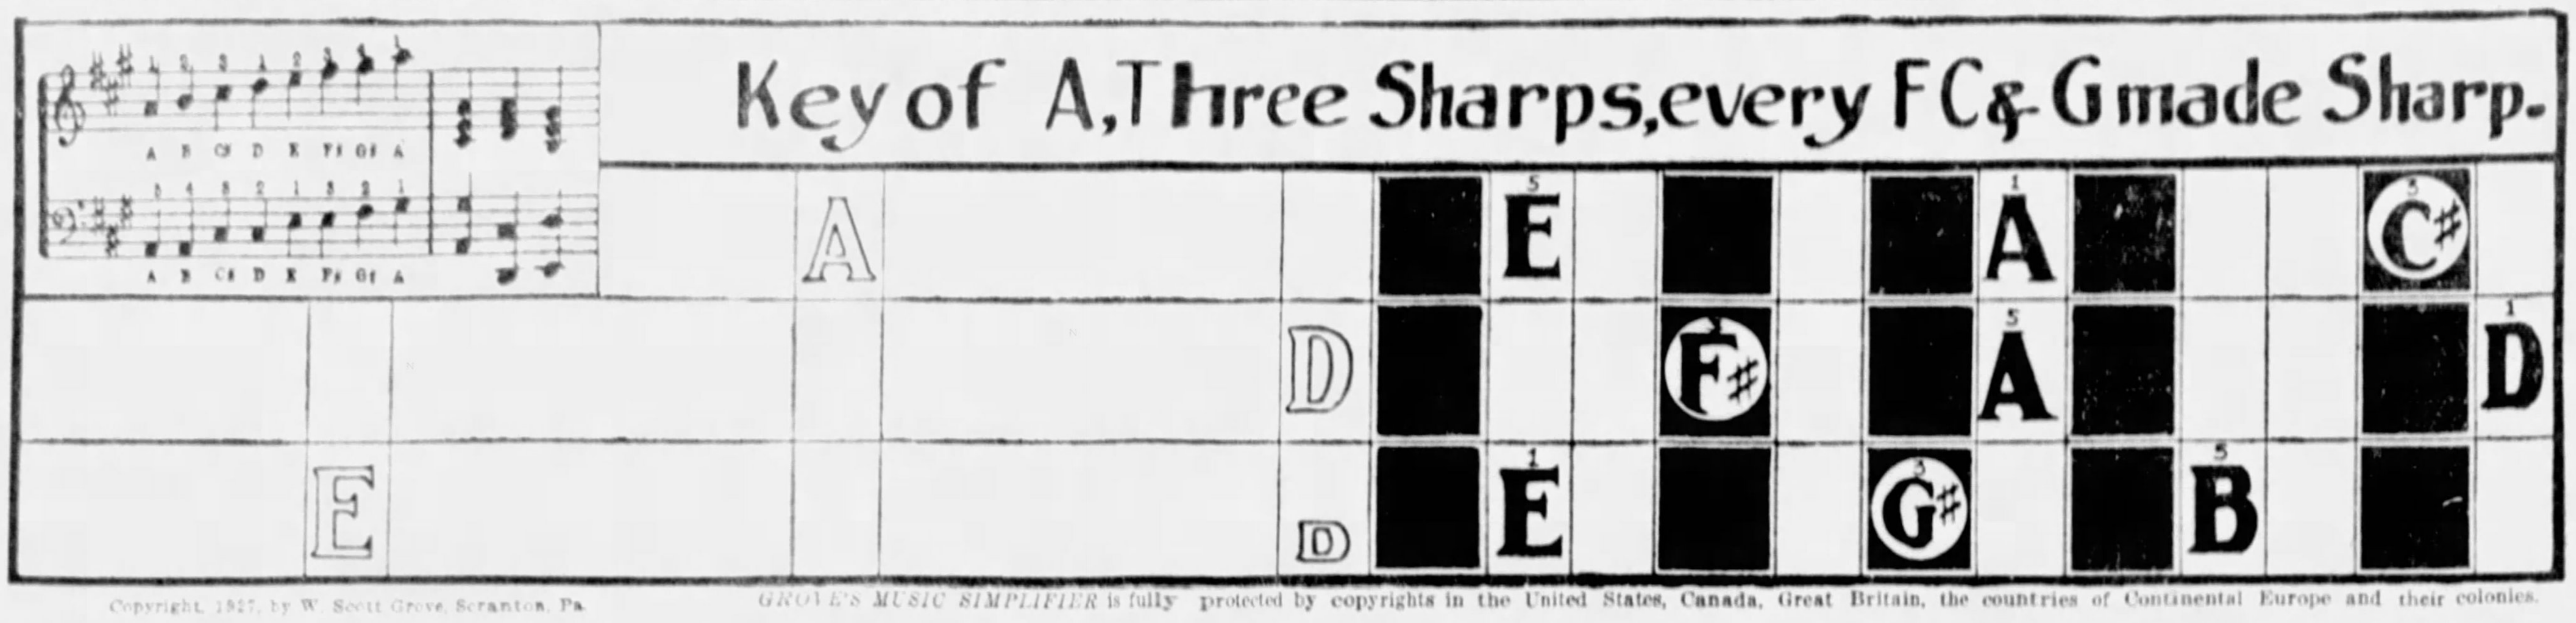
HOME COURSE IN PIANO PLAYING—LESSON NO. 7



Copyright, 1927, by W. Scott Grove, Scranton, Pa.

GROVE'S MUSIC SIMPLIFIER is fully protected by copyrights in the United States, Canada, Great Britain, the countries of Continental Europe and their colonies.

In this, the seventh lesson of the series of home illustrated lessons for the piano or organ, the chord is given for the key of A, which is the relative key of F sharp minor. It should be learned from the chart and then songs or solos on other musical instruments may be accompanied on the piano or organ without any further musical education.

The method of using this chart is extremely simple and presupposes no previous knowledge on the part of the pupil. When the twenty-four lessons are completed, if you follow them all, you will be able to play the chords of every key of music and will have acquired a sound basis on which to build up a musical education.

INSTRUCTION—Place the chart upon the keyboard of piano or organ so that the small white letter D with a dash above it, at the bottom of the chart, is directly over the key D on the keyboard. The white and black spaces will then correspond to the white and black keys of the instrument. Each of the three horizontal series of letters represents a chord. Beginning with the upper row, play the white letter with the left hand and play the three black letters with the right hand, making the first chord. Then, in the same way, play the notes indicated in the second horizontal series, then those in the third and back to the first, forming a complement of chords in A Major.

The first things necessary to become a good player are patience and practice. During the time before the next lesson, the chord shown should be played over and over again until you memorize it and can play it without the chart. Memorize the letters also. You will find that before long you will be able to play simple accompaniments in this key to any melodies you or your friends may sing.

If you wish to go further in studying, learn the fingering of the scales shown on the staff in each chart, upper notes played with right hand, lower with left hand.

Every triad in black letter is marked 1, 3, 5. Always read it so, no matter in what vertical order the notes may be written. Note that the small letter D with a dash above it must not be played.

U. S. WILL SHUN NAVAL PARLEY OF FIVE POWERS

Morrow Reached at Sea Told to Make Attitude of Country Clear at London

WASHINGTON, March 14 (Universal)—Dwight W. Morrow, Republican senator of New Jersey, will arrive in London Monday as a special envoy to make it plain that the United States will not become a party to the new three-power naval treaty, it was learned at the State Department today.

Because of widespread confusion and a persistent effort to draw the United States into the European alliance, Secretary of State Stimson today decided to have Senator Morrow act as his personal representative on the mission.

MORROW AT SEA

Senator Morrow is now on the high seas aboard the Leviathan to spend his vacation in Europe. Secretary Stimson sent him a radio and asked him if he would stop over in London and make the determination of the United States to keep hands off in the naval pact between Great Britain, France and Italy clear to those powers.

The Secretary of State held several long conferences with Senator Morrow, a fellow member of the London disarmament commission, just before he departed after adjournment of the Senate.

Upon his arrival in London Morrow will immediately go into a conference with American Ambassador Charles G. Dawes and later confer with members of the British foreign office. He will reiterate the view expressed by Secretary Stimson here that he considers the new agreement a regional one, which does not in any way affect the London treaty between this country, Great Britain and Japan.

The confusion in the situation has been caused by the overtures on the part of Great Britain to have the United States take part in the final drafting of this treaty.

SEES LAND ARMS CUT

ROME, March 14.—(AP)—The world can disarm its forces of land and air by following the methods embodied in the Italo-French naval accord—actual reduction of armaments as well as limitation of them—Dino Grandi, minister for Foreign Affairs, told the Italian Chamber of Deputies today in reporting to it the details of the naval agreement.

That such disarmament of aerial and military units may be agreed upon at the general disarmament conference next year has been made more probable, the foreign minister said, through the influence of the present agreement.

Fire in Automobile Laid to Cigaret

A lighted cigaret is believed to have started a fire in a sedan parked in front of Engine Company No. 14, Neville street, last night. Firemen from the company sighted the blaze and were forced to break a glass panel to extinguish it. The owner is not known. Damage was estimated at $25.

Hit and Run Driver Injures Pedestrian

Struck by a hit-and-run driver early this morning, Samuel Shrader, 69, giving his address as East Pittsburgh, is in McKeesport Hospital suffering from a fractured knee cap and severe body bruises, according to McKeesport police. The man was said to have been walking along the Lincoln highway near Byerly Crest, when struck by a motorist, who failed to stop after the accident.

Last Wendel Heiress Dies, Cabaret Visit Lone 'Fling'

any of his sisters marrying. The head and probably sole mourner was Tobey, a white poodle dog of advanced years. There was a line of Tobeys owned and coddled and buried in a special cemetery at Irvington by Miss Ella V. Von E. Wendel.

Tobey ate his supper tonight alone on the small brass table adjoining the red-velveted table in the mid-Victorian dining room used by Ella.

TOBEY MISSES STROLL

For the first time in many years Tobey missed being tucked into his miniature four-poster bed by his mistress. And he missed the walks she took with him in the back yard behind the mansion. The slight form of the aged mistress dressed in the trailing skirts, a sailor hat, cape and high-collar of another century's style could be seen with her dog each evening from the windows of adjacent buildings.

The space where she exercised Tobey was worth a fortune to real estate operators and when attempts to buy the mansion proved unavailing they pleaded with Miss Wendel to sell the backyard. She said:

"But I would have no place to walk with my dog."

Ella stepped out just once in her life. Texas Guinan invited her to visit her night club.

Ella went—so the story goes—with a few friends, all mostly as old as she was. The spinster, being out of touch with modernity, went well before midnight, which is the time the sun begins to rise at Broadway night clubs. However, Texas put on her show for Miss Wendell ahead of time.

THOUGHTS HIDDEN

What Ella thought of it all or what she told Tobey about her impressions has never been revealed, but she later sent the night club hostess a $4,500 pocketbook.

The brother rode along Fifth avenue in his coach-and-four until he died in Santa Monica, Cal. During his life-time he ruled his sisters with an iron hand in his attempt to keep the family fortune intact.

Rebecca Wendel, the most beautiful of the sisters, rebelled against his order that they should not marry. She became the bride of Prof. Luther A. Swope. The professor died some years ago. Rebecca died at the age of 87.

Georgiana Wendel, who was next to the last of the sisters to go, also displeased her brother with her desire for companionship and modern life. He had her committed to a sanitarium as "mentally incompetent." She died in 1929.

125 PIECES OF LAND

The passing of the last of the Wendels releases for real estate purposes 125 separate parcels of land in New York ranging from the financial district through midtown New York. In addition there are many holdings in the suburbs. It represents an accumulation of properties which began in the early days of the city. Its exact value cannot be estimated.

Ella Wendel, in her will, left half of her estate to churches and charities.

Those mentioned in the will include the Drew Theological Seminary, the New York Homeopathic Medical College and Flower Hospital, St. Christopher's Home for Children, the Board of Foreign Missions, the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, the National Committee for the Prevention of Blindness, the Methodist Episcopal Church Home, and the West Park Presbyterian Church.

U. S. to Furnish Destitute Aliens Fares Back Home

NEW YORK, March 14.—(INS)—Uncle Sam announced today that he'll foot the bill for any alien, jobless and here for less than three years, who wants to go back to his home country.

Benjamin A. Day, commissioner of immigration at Ellis Island, said a fund is now available for paying fares of those who can prove they are destitute who are in this country under the 3-year provision.

They may apply to any charitable organization for the necessary blanks or at the immigration office at the United States barge office at the Battery. The only requirement, outside of proof they are destitute, is that they must furnish passports.

Autoists Arrange Azelea Show Trip

The azeleas of Charleston, S. C., which drew thousands of motorists from the North each year, will be at their best later than usual this year, according to the Automobile Club of Pittsburgh. Experts say that the best time to see the blossoms will be Easter week instead of the second half of March. An unusually cool spring has retarded the blossoms.

The club has announced that many inquiries have been received as to the best time to see the Magnolia Gardens and the Middleton Gardens, show places of the sea coast region. The automobile club reports all roads to the South in splendid condition for touring.

Massachusetts First to Seek Dry Repealer

WASHINGTON, March 14.—(AP.)—The Massachusetts Legislature's request to Congress for a constitutional convention to consider repeal or amendment of the prohibition act, is the first on record here.

William Tyler Page, clerk of the House, said today that 29 memorials for constitutional conventions on other questions had been received by Congress in the past 30 years, but he could find no record of any requesting specifically action on prohibition.

The Massachusetts memorial will probably be referred by Speaker Longworth to the House Judiciary Committee. There it will rest unless two-thirds of the states present similar demands. The constitution commands Congress to call a convention in event of requests by two-thirds of the states.

The Buhl Foundation is financing the experiment for three years.

Ex-Governor Asks Pardon for Fall

SANTA FE, N. M., March 14.—(AP.)—George Curry, former governor of New Mexico, today circulated a petition among members of the New Mexico State Legislature requesting a federal pardon for Albert B. Fall, former secretary of the interior.

Princess' Son Landed on Train By Hasty Stork

BERLIN, March 14.—(INS.) The Stork, an impatient and inexorable bird, would not be kept waiting today even for a princess of the former Prussian nobility.

The Princess Valerie, of Hohenlohe-Oehringen, gave birth to a son aboard a train while traveling from her home to a hospital. The family physician, who met her en route to escort the princess to the hospital, performed the delivery successfully, although in the excitement of the event he forgot to exercise his privilege of stopping the train.

Mother and child were reported doing well at a Berlin clinic this afternoon.

JURY OF MEN TO TRY DANCER

SALT LAKE CITY, March 14.—(AP.)—The trial of Jean Dayle, 21-year-old cabaret dancer, charged with the slaying of Sam Frank, Memphis jewelry salesman, stood adjourned today until Monday, with the jury still incomplete. The trial halted last night after two days of questioning of veniremen with 12 men in the jury box, but the state had exercised only five of its 10 peremptory challenges and the defense four.

All the prospective jurors denied a double standard of morality would prejudice them against either the defense or the state.

With the removal of Mrs. Jessica E. Evans from the box by the state, prospects were that the jury would be composed entirely of men. Only one other woman, Golda McMahon, is included in the panel and attorneys said she probably would not be called. Mrs. Evans is the mother of three daughters.

The state was expected to start presentation Monday of evidence to prove its contention the girl killed Frank in his hotel room last December 6 and robbed him of jewelry and money.

SEARCH PUSHED FOR WOMAN IN GIRL MART CASE

Detective Trails Ex-Actress Who Vanished as Inquiry Opened; 3 Victims Talk.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., March 14.—(INS.)—Conducting a secret and independent probe of the Hollywood "girl bazaar" case, Chief Investigator Harry Baugh, of San Diego, was searching today for Olive Clark Day, former actress, charged with operating the so-called girl mart.

Baugh said he wants to question Miss Day on several new ramifications of the love bazaar which thus far has brought the arrest and arraignment of three wealthy businessmen, including Alexander Pantages, millionaire theater magnate.

The former actress who, with William H. Jobelmann, is charged with operating the love bazaar, vanished immediately after her release at a midnight bail-bond conference.

GIRLS REVEAL ESCAPADES

Baugh today took new statements from Lydia Nitto, otherwise known as Alice Blake, 16, and Helen Livingston, 17, whose testimony regarding a hotel party brought the arrest of Pantages, Jesse Shreve and John P. Mills.

Questioning of Camille Clark, 16-year-old asserted girl bazaar victim, brought purported admissions that she had twice been taken to San Diego hotel orgies. In payment she said she had received a cheap hat and coat.

According to the girl, the agents who made the bargain for both parties were Miss Day and Jobelmann.

Jobelmann still is in the county jail, unable to raise bond.

Slemp and Law Partner Sued Over Pantages Case

WASHINGTON, March 14.—(INS.)—C. Bascom Slemp and his law partner, Louis C. Titus, today were named defendants in a suit filed in Circuit Court by James Patterson, New York attorney, who says they owe him a part of the $70,000 fee they are said to have received for representing Alexander Pantages, theater magnate, of California.

Slemp was President Coolidge's secretary.

The suit is silent on the nature of the counsel furnished Pantages, who has an appeal pending in the California Appellate Courts from a prison sentence imposed following his conviction on charges of attacking Eunice Pringle, a vaudeville actress, and more recently was arrested in connection with the current investigation on the West Coast of a "girl mart."

Patterson informed the court, through his attorneys, that on March 10, 1930, he entered into negotiations with the local firm whereby they were to represent Pantages and he was to assist in certain phases of the representation and receive one-third of all fees collected.

The defendants only have paid him $14,000 of the $23,333.33 he claims as his third, and he asks the court to order payment of the remaining $9,333.33.

BAY DRAGGED FOR BODIES OF TRIPLE TRAGEDY

Boy Survivor Tells How Mother Drowned Herself, His Brother and Sister

MATTAPOISETT, Mass., March 14.—(INS)—Bowed with grief, a man sat huddled in an automobile tonight watching police, coastguardsmen and fisherfolk in small boats on Buzzards Bay engaged in the task of grappling for the bodies of his family.

William Chester Allinson, a well-to-do textile mill chemist of Saylesville, R. I., saw the body of his daughter, Hope, 7, come up with the fishermen's net about 20 feet from an old winding pier from which his wife last night in her suicide plunge carried to death two of her children.

The grapplers continued the search of the floor of the bay for the bodies of Mrs. Allinson, 35, daughter of a wealthy Fall River family, and Dewitt, 3.

Another son, Wayne, 9, escaped from his mother's drowning clutch, he said, and got safely ashore.

Exhausted by his ordeal the lad slept almost all day at the home of his grandfather in Fall River, while a crowd of curious persons watched outside. Before he slipped away into his disturbed dreams, Wayne sobbed a brief story of the triple tragedy. He said his mother had called for him and the other children at school.

She said she was taking them on a picnic down to see the New York boat go through the Cape Cod canal. They stopped for ice cream en route and the mother kissed her children, Wayne said.

"When we got to the pier, mother drove us down the wharf. It was getting dark. She told us to look for the boat. Suddenly she began pushing us in the water. Hope and Dewitt went first. I said: 'Mother, don't do that.' She was screaming. She grabbed me and we went in. When we came up she let me go but tried to get me. I tried to save her. But She swam away. I could hear her yelling. I got to the wharf and climbed up. I loved mother, Hope and DeWitt so."

Allison told authorities that his wife had been in ill health and despondent for several months.

VET LOANS HERE NEAR 2 MILLION

Pittsburgh district veterans received $1,719,449.46 on adjusted compensation certificates since passage of the loan bill two weeks ago, Regional Manager Michael J. Shortley announced last night on completing his report to the U. S. Veterans' Bureau, Washington.

This sum did not include thousands of dollars estimated to have been received by ex-soldiers here from central and other regional offices, Shortley said. The amount here was paid on 4,560 applications, while 22,959 additional have been filed.

The Allegheny County committee of the American Legion will continue rendering information and assistance to ex-soldiers at the Sun-Telegraph downtown office, Fifth avenue and Market street. Shortley requests veterans to file applications through the branch office so that his bureau can apply more time to issuing checks. The same service is being rendered at the Veterans of Foreign Wars Bureau, 314 Plaza Building. Clyde Hartzell is in charge of the Sun-Telegraph office from 9 a. m. to 5 p. m. The V. F. W. Bureau is open daily from 8:30 a. m. to 5 p. m., with Robert Haley in charge. There is no charge for this assistance.

Doctor Tells How Flaxolyn Speeds New Strength!

Dr. Juan Pallares, who is associated with the University Hospital in picturesque Valencia, Spain.

Follow Dr. Pallares' Advice

If You Seek Nights Rich in Sleep; Days Full of Vim

It is absolutely guaranteed in writing that Flaxolyn will help in cases of general exhaustion, sleeplessness, biliousness, sick headaches, gas, belching, bloating, backaches, poor complexion, and other complaints due to temporary constipation — or druggists will refund the purchase price.

Dr. Juan Pallares was engaged to examine and test the merits of Flaxolyn because he is known as a diligent worker in medicinal research. He says:

"I find that Flaxolyn speeds new strength and energy to the worn-out tired body by giving new impetus to the appetite, by making digestion easier, by bringing mild stimulus to the kidneys and by normalizing the bowel action.

"I am satisfied that Flaxolyn has no habit-forming tendencies and therefore I give it my heartiest endorsement, and congratulate the American chemists who prepare it."

Mrs. M. Guide of Phila. says: "I really can't find words enough to praise Flaxolyn. I look and feel vastly better since taking it."

Thousands of American men and women now depend upon Flaxolyn to keep them in good physical condition. What Flaxolyn has done for others, it can no doubt do for you. Try it. You will feel the improvement at once. You will enjoy renewed vigor and a better grip on life.

CHAPTER LXIII.

Because of its importance the principal points of my formal reply August 31, 1918, to Marshal Foch, who sought at the last minute before the St. Mihiel offensive to put American troops under the command of the French, are given below:

Gen Pershing

I can no longer agree to any plan which involves a dispersion of our units. This is a matter whose importance is such as to demand very frank discussion. Briefly, American officers and soldiers alike are, after one experience, no longer willing to be incorporated in other armies, even though such incorporation be by larger units. The older American divisions have encountered so much difficulty in their service with the French and British that it is inadvisable to consider the return of such divisions to French or British control. The same is true of our corps staffs.

"It has been said that the American Army is a fiction and that it cannot now be actually formed because it lacks artillery and services. Unfortunately this lack is evident. But our shortages in this respect are due to the fact that America brought over infantry and machine gunners to the virtual exclusion of the services and auxiliaries.

"Permit me also to recall that when this decision was made there was coupled with it a promise that the Allies would undertake to provide the necessary services and auxiliaries, and that you yourself have repeatedly guaranteed the formation of a real American Army. It seems to me that it is far more appropriate at the present for the Allies temporarily to furnish the American Army with the services and auxiliaries it needs than for the Allies to expect further delay in the formation of an American Army.

Our Plans
Based on Organization Of American Army

"I am writing faithfully my own ideas, which are those not only of every American officer and soldier, but also of my government.

"Since our arrival in France our plans, not only with the consent but at the initiative of the French authorities, have been based on the organization of the American Army on the front St. Mihiel-Belfort. All our depots, hospitals, training areas and other installations are located with reference to this front, and a change of these plans cannot be easily made. For instance, the care of our wounded must be foreseen. We have already had very grave difficulty and no little dissatisfaction in those of our divisions serving under conditions which made us dependent on the French for the handling and care of our sick and wounded.

"With reference to the objective to be considered in the St. Mihiel operation, I agree, of course, with you, that an advance to the line Thiaucourt-Vigneulles would accomplish the primary result sought by the operation. I think, however, that it is advisable, even in limiting the result sought, to make the attack north of Les Eparges, at least as a secondary operation.

"Unfortunately both the French and the Americans have talked, and it now seems certain the enemy is aware of the approaching attack. Nevertheless, I believe the attack should be made, and that decision as to the extent to which any success should be exploited should be reserved. To do this it seems essential that I should hold available all the divisions I am now concentrating for the St. Mihiel operation.

"The number of American divisions available immediately after the attack cannot, of course, be foretold with any certainty. However, it would appear entirely impracticable to carry out the St. Mihiel operation and to assemble the 12 to 16 American divisions for an attack in the direction of Mezieres between the 15th and 20th of September.

"In fact, it would be necessary to begin at once the movements preliminary to the assembly of the 12 or 16 divisions contemplated by your note.

"It is improbable that any of the divisions actually engaged in the St. Mihiel operation could be withdrawn and gotten into position for the Mezieres operation by September 20. Then, too, the second line divisions which will not become involved even in the limited attack can hardly exceed six, and these could not be the most experienced divisions.

Strategy
Decision Foch's; Pershing Agrees to Obey

"Assuming, however, that six of the divisions from the St. Mihiel operation would be available, we should still have to find six to 10 divisions to make up the 12 to 16 divisions your note contemplates for employment in the Mezieres operation, and we must seek these divisions elsewhere.* * ***

"It seems apparent to me that it is impracticable to carry out even the limited St. Mihiel operation and yet assemble 12 to 16 American divisions, suitable for undertaking an offensive, by September 15 or 20. It therefore follows that the St. Mihiel operation must be abandoned or that the Mezieres operation must be postponed if 12 to 16 American divisions are to participate in the latter operation.

Marshal Foch

"Moreover, if the St. Mihiel operation is carried out it is only after its completion that it would be practicable to fix a date upon which it would be possible to have available 12 to 16 American divisions fit for a powerful offensive . . .

"In your capacity as Allied commander-in-chief it it your province to decide as to the strategy of operations, and I abide by your decisions.

"FINALLY, HOWEVER, THERE IS ONE THING THAT MUST NOT BE DONE, AND THAT IS TO DISPERSE THE AMERICAN FORCES AMONG THE ALLIED ARMIES; the danger of destroying by such dispersion the fine morale of the American soldier is too great, to say nothing of the results to be obtained by using the American Army as a whole.

"If you decide to utilize American forces in attacking in the direction of Mezieres I accept that decision, even though it complicates my supply system and the care of sick and wounded, BUT I DO INSIST THAT THE AMERICAN ARMY MUST BE EMPLOYED AS A WHOLE, either east of the Argonne or west of the Argonne, and not four or five divisions here and six or seven there."

In my letter I also brought out the possibility that the American Army carry out the St. Mihiel attack and immediately thereafter attack again in the vicinity of Belfort or Luneville, the entire sector from the St. Mihiel to the Swiss border being eventually turned over to us. It was my idea that once the St Mihiel front was under our control we should attack either to the northeast or to the east.

August 31 Gen Petain and I considered the change in arrangements that would be required by the limited St. Mihiel operation.

The point first to be decided was whether the attack planned against the western face of the salient should be abandoned. Originally three or four American divisions, with five or six French divisions on their left, were to make this assault, while the principal blow was being struck by a wholly American force against the southern face.

Gen. Petain

The newly proposed operations on the Aisne would prevent the participation of the six French divisions and at least two of the American divisions.

In contending that an attack on the western face would be necessary to give us the maximum benefit from the effort to be made north of Toul, I proposed that there should be at least seven divisions in the first line of the attack on the southern face and two in reserve, with one or two divisions attacking from the west.

Opening a map on which he had sketched a project for this same attack, Petain showed exactly the same dispositions and number of divisions which I had planned in an independent study. It was his opinion and my own that once Marshal Foch had determined the strategical use of an army by prescribing the direction and extent of its employment, the details were solely the province of the commander-in-chief of the army concerned, and that Foch had nothing further to do with it.

We considered the question of putting the American Army astride the Aisne as proposed by the marshal. A glance at the map showed the difficulty of working up the Valley of the Aisne, as the heights of the left bank dominated those on the right, while deep ravines and projecting ridges offered serious obstacles.

The main objection to Foch's scheme, however, was that the American Army would be separated into two parts, with a French army between them. Petain was decidedly of my opinion that this should not be done, and that as the American Army was now in the Woevre it should continue to hold that sector and expand from there.

Petain
Proposes to Give U. S. Army Argonne Line

We agreed that beginning with the Moselle, its then eastern flank, the American front could gradually be extended to the west as the forces increased. In retaining its position in the Woevre, it would, in fact, be possible to extend in either or both directions.

We concluded that eventually the American First Army might extend to Douaumont, the Second to the Suippas and the Third to Rheims, relieving the French Second Army and then the Fourth. Petain thought the Americans would later deliver the final blow along the Meuse.

Referring to Metz, I expressed the view that it would have a tremendous moral and material effect on Germany if the Allies should advance in that direction.

Petain considered that it could not well be undertaken until after we had straightened out the line along the Meuse. He did not agree with the Marshal, who thought all could be settled on the left of the line. I referred to dependence of Germany on the mines in that region, and pointed out how jealously guarded it was by the Germans.

After some further discussion Petain definitely proposed that he transfer to the Americans the whole of the front from the Moselle River to the Argonne Forest, exactly what I had suggested to Foch the day before.

Marshal
Calls Conference With Pershing-Petain

If we should attack between the Meuse and the Argonne, Petain thought all that could be done before winter would be to take Montfaucon, and stated that we could not contemplate the attack to the west of the Meuse until the St. Mihiel salient had been reduced.

My Chief of Staff, General McAndrew, and Chief of Operations, Fox Conner, were sent to confer with Weygand September 1 and returned to Ligny-en-Barrois with word that Marshal Foch desired to see Gen. Petain and me the following day.

Col. Payot

Motoring to Petain's headquarters with Boyd and de Marenches, we found McAndrew and Conner had preceded us, and after lunch we went to Bombon. The others present at the conferences were Marshal Foch and his immediate staff, Gen. Petain with Gen. Buat, his Chief of Staff, and Colonels Dufieux and Payot.

Agree
That American Army Operate As Unit

As a result of the several conversations that had taken place since August 30 it seemed more than probable that all differences would be settled. When we met there was little of the atmosphere of the meeting at my headquarters three days before.

Opening the conference Foch referred to the note he had handed me August 30, and to my reply and asked my observations. Stating my attitude on the desirability of carrying out vigorous offensives to the fullest possible extent, I explained that if it should be deemed necessary to abandon the St. Mihiel project in order to begin the larger offensive which was understood to be west of the Meuse, I would abide by his decision.

Taking up the first part of my reply, Marshal Foch said that if he understood me correctly I wished to postpone the St. Mihiel operation and concentrate entirely upon operations west of the Meuse.

I explained that this was not exactly correct, but that to begin an operation west of the Meuse between September 15 and 20, as he had suggested, would be impossible if we were to conduct the St. Mihiel offensive on the tenth, unless we could have plenty of transportation.

In the ensuing discussion, while there was considerable sparring, it was agreed the American Army should operate as a unit under its own commander on the Meuse-Argonne front. In my opinion, with which the French tacitly concurred, no other Allied troops had the morale or the offensive spirit to overcome the difficulties to be met in the Meuse-Argonne sector.

Marshal Foch concluded that the date for the operation should be postponed so we could first carry out the limited attack at St. Mihiel. We finally reached the definite understanding that after St. Mihiel our 1st Army should prepare, to begin this second offensive not later than September 25.

The French 4th Army was to advance at the same time west of the Argonne. The line from the Moselle to the Argonne, 90 miles long, was to be under my command and was to include certain French divisions to be left in the sector. The details of boundaries between the French and American sectors were to be settled by Gen. Petain and myself.

Our commitments now represented a gigantic task, involving the execution of the major operation against the St. Mihiel salient and the transfer of certain troops employed in that battle, together with many others, to a new front, and the initiation of the second battle in the brief space of two weeks.

No Parallel
To Move 500,000 Men In 24 Days.

Plans for this second concentration contemplated the movement of some 500,000 men and 2,700 guns, more than half of which would have to be transferred from the battlefield of St. Mihiel by three roads, almost entirely during the hours of darkness.

In other words, we had undertaken to launch with practically the same army within the next 24 days two great attacks on battlefields 60 miles apart.

Each of the allied armies already occupied its own front, and the necessary installations, more complicated than the public utility services of a great city, were already established. We were confronted with the problem of taking over a new portion of the line and had to put in many new installations.

The time was very short. A million tons of supplies and munitions had to be transported to the Meuse-Argonne front before the attack. As nearly all our truck transportation was involved at this time in connection with the St. Mihiel operation, only a limited amount was then available for use in preparing for the second attack.

When viewed as a whole, it is believed that history gives no parallel of such an undertaking with so large an army.

At that moment it could not be said that my staff in the 1st Army was perfect, although it had already done exceedingly well so far and was being rapidly whipped into shape under the able direction of Col. H. A. Drum, 1st Army chief of staff, and by his principal assistants. The staffs of two of the four army corps had already gained profitable experience, but the others had only recently been organized. It was only my absolute faith in the energy and resourcefulness of our officers of both staff and line and the resolute and aggressive courage of our soldiers that permitted me to accept such a prodigious undertaking.

Col. Drum

Instructions
Issued to Carry Out Amended Program

It was a relief to have a decision. While certain changes were necessary in plans already under way, the limiting of the St. Mihiel operation made the preliminaries for it somewhat easier to complete.

In spite of this, the additional burden on my 1st Army staff was so great that I at once assigned several officers from G. H. Q. to assist. Immediate instructions were issued to carry out the amended program.

My diary has this notation:

"Ligny-en-Barrois, Friday, September 6, 1918. Lord Reading called on me in Paris Tuesday to discuss shipping. He also presented the advantages of having the American Army near the British.

"Gen. Diaz came to request American divisions. Reports indicate President urging economic and political pressure against Germany by Scandinavian countries."

Lord Reading

In my discussion of shipping with Lord Reading the increase of British tonnage for our use seemed to hinge on the allotment of a greater proportion of our troops for service with their armies. He advocated having the American Army near theirs, especially maintaining that our supply and equipment would really be facilitated, all of which was a repetition of arguments other British officials had advanced. But the question as to the employment of our troops as an army was settled.

Lord Reading's engaging personality made it interesting to talk with him, even though we were on different sides of the question, he as an advocate without particular conviction, and I entrenched behind the soundness of the principle involved.

Later in the day Gen. Diaz, Italian commander-in-chief, with whom I was on very friendly terms, called to see me. The object of his visit was to ask that American troops be sent for service with the Italian armies.

Italian Plea
Services of Million Soldiers Sought

In framing his request he at first mentioned 20 divisions, and as I showed no evidence of surprise, having become quite accustomed to that sort of thing, he possibly thought that was a favorable sign, so while the interpreter was translating he interrupted and raised the number to 25 divisions. With all the auxiliary service that would have been required to constitute an army of that many divisions, it would have reached the modest total of 1,000,000 men.

Gen. Diaz

This request, coming from one in his position, was so astonishing that it was difficult to regard it seriously. In reply, it seemed unnecessary to go into details, so I merely let him know very politely that we were in need of troops ourselves and could not send any more to Italy.

Other conferences filled a busy day, to which was added a motor trip to Ligny-en-Barrois, with a brief stop at Vitry-le-Francois for dinner. This journey took me through portions of the scene of the First Battle of the Marne, where the successive phases of the battle could be traced by the crosses over the graves of those who had fallen. Whenever I passed through this district the dreadful toll in human life that war demanded always passed through my mind.

As we were now about to enter into an active campaign, the thought came to me, perhaps as never before, that many an American boy would likewise be buried where he fell before the contest in which we were engaged came to an end.

Since the war the bodies of our men who were left in France have been gathered into a few cemeteries, where they lie in precise rows under the shadow of our own flag within the sacred limits of their small bit of America. Most of these spots mark the field of valor where they fell, and each has become a shrine where devoted comrades and countrymen may go in remembrance of American youth who consecrated their lives to a sublime cause.

It has been a great privilege for me to be at the head of the commission to erect suitable memorials in our cemeteries and on our battlefields, through which a grateful people may commemorate the sacrifices of their own.

But no matter what else we may do to beautify the hallowed ground where our dead lie buried, nothing can ever take the place of the white marble crosses and stars that mark the graves. They stand as a remembrance of sacrifice and as symbols of our faith in immortality.

All Healing Is Done Through the Blood Stream

A patient does one of two things after a disease process has invaded his system. Either he recovers or else he succumbs to the disease. (Chronic Stage).

There is no treatment that can have a healing effect until it reaches the blood. To strengthen the power of it—to make it nearly perfect as possible must be the basis of all treatment. No matter how radical may be the advocates of any particular science or mode of healing there is one great common premise which every system of treatment must acknowledge, and that basic element is THE BLOOD.

By administering BLOOD CELL PROTEIN SERUMS directly into the blood stream, their healing virtues are not lost. A great truth comes into view, and that is, intravenous therapy is fast becoming one of the prime autocrats of medicine. A method that is scientific while the results are more certain.

BLOOD CELL PROTEIN SERUMS affect not only one organ, but have a corrective influence on every part of the body. One serum frequently gives relief. Chronic and obstinate diseases often readily yield to the action of BLOOD CELL PROTEIN SERUMS.

FEDERAL JUDGE BRANDS POSTAL DEAL 'OUTRAGE'

Upholding Lower Court, He Scores St. Paul Lease, Aired in Senate Probe

ST. LOUIS, March 14.—(AP.)—The St. Paul postoffice lease controversy had another echo in the United States Court of Appeals here today in an opinion by Presiding Judge Kimbrough Stone in which he termed the rental of the Commercial Station Postoffice at St. Paul "outrageous."

Judge Stone's comment was made in an opinion upholding the United States District Court at St. Paul, which gave the government immediate possession of the postoffice property, pending a decision on a purchase price of $317,562 set by a condemnation commission. The rental of the Commercial Station Postoffice was the focus of a senatorial investigation this winter.

HIGH RENTAL PAID

The government had used the postoffice building for several years, paying the Commercial Station Postoffice, Inc., owners of the property, an annual rental of $120,000—the figure Judge Stone termed "outrageous."

After $480,000 had been appropriated for its outright purchase, the government failed to come to an agreement on price, and a condemnation commission fixed the price at $317,562, which was appealed from by the owners. The government applied for immediate possesion under the sale, a move designed to end the rental. The order of the District Court to that effect was appealed to the Appellate Court.

The owners of the building contended the District Court's order was without authority in law, that there was no necessity for it, and that it was improvident.

CALLED 'OUTRAGEOUS'

Judge Stone cited the law in disposing of the first two objections and then continued:

"Another consideration which might well affect the discretion of the (District) court, is that this record shows that the commissioners placed the value of this property at $317,562.

"This lease was for a longtime annual rental of $120,500, or an annual rental of more than 37½ per cent of the value of the property as found by disinterested commissioners. Such an outrageous rental suggests a powerful incentive to the appellants (owners of the building) to delay in every possible manner the ultimate determination of the condemnation proceedings."

Men's Bible Class To Hold Banquet

This Dainty Foot pushed a Ton in Ten Miles

— THAT'S ... "CLUTCH-FOOT"

Every time you press the clutch you call on your leg muscles for 35 pounds of pressure. Ten miles . . . and you've pushed a ton! A whole "inch-ton" engineers prove.

No trick figures these . . . as weary leg muscles will tell you. Clutch. De-clutch. Again and again. Driving drudgery! Hupmobile's Free-Wheeling ends it. You shift from second to high, back and forth, and need never touch the clutch. Need never use it at all, except to start or back up. Free-Wheeling reduces clutch use 67%, as shown by road and traffic tests.

But clutch freedom is only a fragment of Hupmobile's great story. 20 to 44 percent of the time you ride "on momentum." Resting your engine. Consuming almost no gas and oil. And enjoying . . . the smooth, swift, silent rush of floating instant power, but always in gear and always under control.

Free-Wheeling, built with the mechanical fineness so typically Hupmobile... and the lowest prices in Hupmobile's history ... doesn't that combination suggest a demonstration? Phone your Hupmobile dealer.

FOCH: A GREAT FIGURE IN AMERICAN HISTORY

HE COMMANDED THE LARGEST AMERICAN ARMY EVER ASSEMBLED

READERS WILL WANT THE

It is a coincidence that two of the greatest figures in American military history were not Americans at all and that both were Frenchmen. One, of course, was that young aristocrat, the Marquis de la Fayette, who led a handful of adventurous Frenchmen here to help Washington and who has been the hero of the American schoolboy since. The other is Ferdinand Foch, that spirited little Frenchman, the driving force of victory, who as Supreme Commander of the Allies, directed the largest American Army ever assembled.

ADAPTABILITY
The Secret of Success

In the minds of most men, the principal constituents of success are phenomenal ability and timely opportunity. In other words, Success is the offspring of talent and luck. However, such a gross misconception of the facts is inexcusable in the light of the evidence.

An intelligent study of History reveals the real secret of Success. In one word, it might properly be termed—Adaptability. The great men of all time have been characterized by their ability to meet adverse conditions face to face and master them, sometimes even turning them into advantages. As a matter of fact, most of the outstanding figures of the past emblazoned their names on History's pages when "conditions" were absolutely unfavorable. Napoleon built an empire out of the shattered remnants of a revolution-torn country. Washington, the wealthy Virginia planter, was comparatively unknown until he sacrificed everything and embraced what was generally accepted as a hopeless cause.

Unquestionably, we are in the midst of what most people regard as the most trying times they have ever witnessed. For that very reason right NOW is the opportune time to display to the fullest advantage whatever inate ability you might have.

Today, there is a nation-wide demand for more salesmen. This demand is being broadcast (partly on this very page) to the general public. How many men will heed this call? Only as many as realize that by doing so they will be adapting themselves to conditions and turning adversity into an advantage. Remember, in this form of adaptability lies the real secret of SUCCESS.

WM. HENRY WEIR, JR.

MEN

IN OUR PITTSBURGH GENERAL BRANCH WE WILL EMPLOY 11 ADDITIONAL MEN IMMEDIATELY FOR SPECIAL INTRODUCTORY WORK ON AN INVENTION THAT IS ALTERING THE COURSE OF AN ENTIRE INDUSTRY. THE GREATEST OPPORTUNITY EVER OFFERED TO MEN WHO HAVE THE INSTINCT TO MAKE MONEY.

This offer is to men who sincerely desire not only to make enough to cover their running expenses but who want to get ahead. Such men who can qualify to do our work we will sign up on a program enabling them to draw $51.00 per week out of commissions which will accumulate an additional $11,500.00 in five years.

No limit, however, is placed upon your earnings. Throughout the country we have men making as high as $1,000.00 a month. Others, $750.00, $600.00, $500.00 and $400.00. Last week Davison earned over $500.00, Knox over $400.00, Jenkins $337.50, all in one week. A product with which men can do that means genuine opportunity if you can learn as these men did AND YOU CAN.

Here are some facts upon which to base conclusions. We introduced this new product here less than a year ago, and the writer of this announcement acclaimed it the greatest service innovation in the history of the industry. Events of the intervening months have not only certified but complimented that prediction. Regardless of the fact that this was a $75,000,000.00 institution, with branches in all principal cities throughout the country, our sales for 1930 doubled over 1929, despite the downward trend of general business and in this particular industry.

The first two months of this year again doubled over the same period of last year, and the first half of March is the greatest first half of any month in our history. This invention introduces a new principle of operation that sets an entirely new standard of excellence in the greatest utility market of all time. There is no limit to present or future opportunities.

If you can make a success of a successful business—if you have money-making instinct—COME ON ALONG. Our men are making real money in cash, our organization is growing stronger every day, mutual confidence and good fellowship prevail because the management is experienced, sincere and of sound judgment.

Come in Monday morning and investigate. If you qualify you can start at once. The training is free. There is no expense. We furnish full equipment with no deposit.

You must be of good reputation, active, alert, and of positive personality. You must be capable of understanding and following successful procedure, interested in acquiring skill in what you do. Please do not apply for this position unless you feel you can meet these requirements. Applicants will be personally interviewed Monday 8:30 to 12, and 1 to 4.

CLOVERCREST

Two years ago the present beautiful and exclusive Point Breeze development was a rugged, wooded hillside—since that time 36 new homes have been built, each costing $30,000 to $75,000—all different in design and construction and with the exception of four are now occupied by satisfied owners, representative Pittsburgh families who know their real estate—there has been but one resale at a fine profit to the owner, a very good record during two poor business years. The purchasers have located here on account of the clean, quiet and high location away from traffic dangers, for the safety of their children, its proximity to Linden school, and to the absolute protection afforded by rigid restrictions. Several new homes of brick and stone construction having nine rooms, [illegible] second floor bedrooms, three baths, breakfast room, with all the newer appointments, are offered for sale. Liberal terms if desired. Clovercrest is located off Reynolds St., between Dallas and Linden and from Linden Avenue at Edgerton St. Open every day for inspection. Montrose 1705.

NEW ROAD LINK BENEFITS PLAN IN BRENTWOOD

Construction in Brentwood Grove Heavy; Greenlee Road Grading Starts

By EDWARD GOSS
Real Estate Editor

Property in Brentwood Grove, Brentwood borough's newest residential section, will be made more desirable according to realtors, when work on paving and continuing Greenlee road through to Saw Mill Run boulevard is completed.

Engineers are now engaged on grading the road-bed. When finished it will provide residents of Brentwood Grove an easy and quick route to downtown Pittsburgh via Saw Mill Run boulevard and the Liberty Tubes. It will also be the shortest link between Brownsville road and Saw Mill Run boulevard.

45 HOUSES BUILT

Since 1928 when the Brentwood Land Company opened the Grove for home builders 45 houses have been constructed and most of the building lots purchased. Seven more homes, each an example of modern architecture and featuring the latest interior fixtures, are now under construction. Charles T. Stevens, secretary of the land company, predicts an even greater activity this spring. Most of the homes, Stevens avers, have been built and are being occupied by their owners.

Public improvements made in the 45 acres comprising Brentwood Grove have reached the total cost of $70,000. They include the paving of every street except one and the installation of water and water mains under sidewalks. By placing mains under the sidewalks it will not be necessary to tear up a street if one of the mains should burst.

RECENT BUILDERS

Among the most recent builders in the development are Charles J. Horn, Joseph Karcher, C. M. Wolfe, F. J. West and the Eicker Brothers. Both West and Wolfe are building two small homes in Bellanca avenue. Eicker Brothers are now excavating in preparation of building a bungalow and garage in Bremen avenue.

AMERICAN RUGS NOW POPULAR

When it comes to furnishings for the home, the modern style trend in rugs is toward American made orientals, according to local rug dealers. Recreations of masterpieces found in museums and palaces in the Orient and in Europe are becoming popular with those who have always considered genuine orientals beyond their buying power.

American copies have similar soft rich colors, deep pile of picked wool, imported from the Near East and China, and the silky sheen of orientals. Their wearing power has been demonstrated and the prices are within the average American budget.

The colors and patterns are versatile and various enough to harmonize with the new popular period effects.

BROKERS PLAN SALES CONFAB

An all-day sales conference open to members of the Pittsburgh Real Estate Board will be held Friday, March 27, by Guy W. Ellis, former president of the Detroit Real Estate Board, in the William Penn Hotel.

Guy W. Ellis

In the morning from 10 a. m. to 12 noon his subject will be "The Dollars You Are Missing Down the Street" and "Some Commissions Paid by Property Briefs." At the afternoon session Ellis will discuss "New Approaches to Business Men" and "How to Make Appreciative Prospects."

Ellis' conference in Pittsburgh is one of many he is holding through the courtesy of the National Association of Real Estate Boards.

Washington's House To Be Reproduced

The replica of the Washington mansion and buildings of Mt. Vernon, which will form the American group at the International Colonial Exposition at Paris this spring, was put together with tools that, in many instances were hardly more advanced than those with which the original structure was built, according to members of the American architectural and construction staff in charge of the work, now nearing completion. For a part of the work ordinary hammers, hand saws and similar tools had to be brought from the United States.

Managers Announce New House Organ

Skyscraper Management, a magazine devoted to business and the profession of the management of commercial buildings, will make its debut this month, it is announced by Charles F. Palmer, president of the National Association of Building Owners and Managers. The publication will succeed The Bulletin of the association which has been published for 16 years. Skyscraper Management is owned and controlled by the association.

Park Will Address Realtors Tuesday

District Attorney Andrew T. Park will be the guest speaker at the weekly luncheon meeting of the Pittsburgh Real Estate Board to be held Tuesday in the blue room of the William Penn Hotel. Park's topic will be "Criminal Courts."

26 Building Lots Sold for $10,000

FUTURE CITY IS PICTURED

The city of the future will not be lined with towering shafts that touch the clouds, nor will its streets be double and triple-decked for coming traffic jams, nor will commuting airplanes land on office roofs, says Herbert U. Nelson, executive secretary of the National Association of Real Estate Boards.

Members of the real estate organization are engaged in laying out cities, handling present-day skyscrapers, and building factories as well as selling sites, and Mr. Nelson's predictions are based on trends he has noted in all these fields.

He draws a picture of the next century's cities in which commercial buildings are a block long, but not any higher than they are today, and in which noiseless elevated systems will transport the crowds via air and sunshine routes instead of in subways.

Knots in Lumber No Longer Despised

While the industrial user of lumber still prefers clear to knotty lumber, the long despised knot has become a symbol of superiority for certain building uses. The vogue of knotty boards, especially pine, for interior wall covering, panels, and wainscots has become so great that every millwork lumber yard anxiously scans its lumber piles for the knotty boards.

Old Bathrooms Go Way of Hair Sofas

Old-fashioned bathrooms are going the way of the horsehair sofa and other obsolete furniture, as noted interior decorators and designers have decreed that the up-to-date bathroom in 1931 will be one of perfectly matched harmony in colors, lines and fixtures.

Hamilton Company Gets New Salesmen

Frank Tickner and W. R. McConnell, formerly associated with the C. L. Saxton Company, have been added to the sales force of C. C. Hamilton & Co., downtown realtors.

Pittsburgh's Present Need Is Planning, Monteverde

Pittsburgh has followed the line of least resistance in her industrial growth, declares L. W. Monteverde, realtor, in a symposium directed by the Committee on City and Regional Planning of the American Institute of Architects.

The city's municipal personality and individuality may be emphasized by the careful planning of future developments and by the use of architectural control, Mr. Monteverde explains. John Ihlder, director of the Pittsburgh Housing Association, expresses similar views.

"Pittsburgh," Monteverde says, "is truly an individual city, as it stands pre-eminent as the workshop of the world. Her development in the past has been one of force and progress following the line of least resistance in the onrush to greater things industrially.

"I believe now, however, it is possible to secure and maintain a reasonable control of the changes and the growth of any city through the police power of zoning and general city planning development. The general direction of effort and the basic divisions that must be made should be indicated and controlled by planning bodies."

U. S. Realty Company Brokers in Trade of Apartment, House

The United States Realty Company, downtown brokers, represented by Maurice Kohner, has sold for Louis Merwitzer to Attorney Joseph A. Langfitt, Jr., an apartment building at Tennessee avenue and Annex street.

In part payment, according to the brokers, Attorney Langfitt deeded to Merwitzer a large center-hall type residence at 1343 Malvern avenue, near Plainfield street. The apartment building contains 14 suites and six garages.

The same realty company has sold for A. M. Levine to C. Chapman a lot fronting 30 feet on Beechwood boulevard, near Lilac street, and extending back 137 feet to the W. E. Harmon plan of lots. The purchaser is planning to erect a residence on the property this spring.

Mortgage Report Issued for Week

According to the report of C. C. C. Stotler, secretary of The Title Guaranty Company, there were 319 mortgages amounting to $1,271,529.51 placed on record from March 5 to, and including, March 11. Twenty-seven of these amounting to $108,669.12 were purchase money mortgages.

Two hundred and ninety-two mortgages totaling $1,162,860.39 were straight mortgages.

Penn Ave. Building Leased for 10 Years

The Wallace Real Estate Company, represented by Maurice F. Wallace, has leased for John W. Hubbard the three-story brick building at 6375 Penn avenue to the Pittsburgh Electric and Manufacturing Company for a term of 10 years at an approximate rental of $60,000. The building is on a lot 56x120 feet and contains 20,000 feet of floor space.

Double House Sold In Herndon Street

The Real Estate Company of Pittsburgh, represented by S. T. Christian, has sold for Thomas McBridhe to Samuel W. Wernert a double house at 2006-08 Herndon street for a private consideration.

ESTATES HAVE CABIN OFFICE

Instead of an ordinary modern field office of clapboard or stucco, Frankstown Estates, Penn Township, will use a 110-year-old log cabin.

The cabin was built in 1819 by Henry Morrow, pioneer settler in that section. Hand-hewn logs, cemented in place with clay, form the walls and framework and the two huge original stone fireplaces are still in a remarkable state of preservation. The work of restoring the cabin is under the supervision of Raymond A. Fisher, architect.

Two interesting documents, yellow with age, will hang on the walls of the office. One is the original deed transferring the property from one Hugh Donaldson to Henry Morrow and the other is the survey of the tract. Both were executed in 1819. Donaldson had secured a vast section of the wilderness from the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania known as the "Grant of Good Intent."

Realtors See Film On Brick Making

E. B. Guenther, advertising manager of the Harbison-Walker Refractories Company, was the guest speaker at the weekly luncheon meeting of the Pittsburgh Real Estate Board last Tuesday in the William Penn Hotel.

After brief introductory remarks, Guenther exhibited three reels of motion pictures, two of which described the making of brick of different sizes and one revealed in detail the laboratory and research work conducted by his company in keeping abreast of the latest developments in industry.

Hoover Given Plan To Speed Building

Public construction work of the office of the Supervising Architects, Department of the Treasury, should be decentralized by placing it with local architects and engineers throughout the country in order to speed up construction, President Herbert Hoover was advised March 11 by Charles F. Abbott, executive director of the American Institute of Steel Construction.

G. J. Mellott Buys Forest Hills Lot

A lot measuring 49x62 feet in Wilkins road, Forest Hills Borough, has been sold by the Bryn Mawr Land Company to Gilbert J. Mellott for $1,300. For the named consideration of $9,000, Henry M. Martindale has conveyed to Richard A. Fischer an improved property in Rebecca avenue, Wilkinsburg. The lot is 30x122 feet.

Sell 300-Acre Farm On Perry Highway

A 300-acre farm on the Perry highway, 45 miles north of Pittsburgh, has been sold by the Rev. C. G. Jordan, former state secretary of agriculture, through the office of the Rodgers Realty Company, Slippery Rock. The farm is equipped with two residences, large barns and outbuildings and is underlaid with a vein of coal.

ALASKA DOCTOR MAKES APPEAL FOR ANTI-TOXIN

Diphtheria Epidemic Grave, Says Physician, Urging Fresh Supply of Serum

POINT BARROW, Alaska, March 14.—(INS)—That the diphtheria epidemic raging along the Arctic Coast was a grave one was revealed here today by Dr. Henry W. Griest, who said the situation might be controlled here and elsewhere if plenty of anti-toxin serum could be obtained in time. He also asserted that a plane should be at his disposal, as dog team transportation to various settlements hampered the scope of treatment to sufferers.

The epidemic apparently broke out at Point Hope or vicinity, according to Dr. Griest, who said the affliction was diagnosed as tonsilitis. No quarantines resulted and the disease gradually traveled northward to Wainwright and finally to Point Barrow. The disease was carried into the hinterlands by trappers. z

Dr. Griest stated that the only serum for treating those exposed was old and that in some cases it failed to immunize. A supply of serum brought here by plane from Fairbanks is now nearly exhausted, he said, and he appealed for a new supply.

FINANCIAL Local Securities MARKETS

LOCAL MARKET LIST NARROW DURING WEEK

Irregular Price Swings Noted in Active Stocks; Trading Volume Is Light.

The price movement on the Pittsburgh Stock Exchange during the week continued to reflect an uncertain public attitude toward the market, although there was a tendency in the more active issues to seek higher ground. Absence of outside interest in the market served to hold the volume of trading at a relatively low figure. Of the 24,000 shares turned over during the week, approximately 70 per cent were accounted for by about a half dozen issues in which the traders centered their dealings. Two of the fuels, Lone Star Gas and Plymouth Oil, led the market in point of volume, each accounting for more than 4,500 shares. Next in activity were Mesta Machine and Pittsburgh Forgings with 2,700 and 2,500 shares, respectively.

GAS DEAL RUMORED

Of the week's developments bearing on the local market particularly, only one received more than passing attention. This was a report that the Columbia Gas-United Corporation interests were considering an offer of exchange for Lone Star. United Corporation is the huge Morgan-Bonbright utility holding company whose affiliations extend to practically all parts of the country.

Officials denied that an exchange on the basis reported was under consideration, but some interests who are well informed as to Lone Star and Columbia were inclined to regard the incorporation of the Lone Star property into Columbia as a feasible development. United Corporation has large holdings of Columbia, which has largely the same management as Lone Star. Shares of the latter company made only meagre response to the story.

MAIN LIST DULL

In the general list here the week's net changes were comparatively small, being confined to a point or less in most cases. A rather wide drop in Zoller common was due partly to the fact that the stock had not appared in the market for several months. Plymouth Oil slipped to a new low on rumors of an expected dividend cut. The last quarterly payment was at the rate of $2 a year. With the stock selling currently between 12 and 13, an adjustment of the rate seems likely.

PRICE INDEX TONE FIRMER

AUBURNDALE, Mass., March 14.—(AP.)—For the second consecutive week more individual groups advanced in price than declined, says the McGill Commodity Service. During the week just closed, out of 14 separate computations of commodities, six advanced, four declined, and four remain unchanged. Rising prices were stronger than price declines and the net result was a moderate upturn in the average of all commodities.

Based on latest reports, commodity prices are showing more resistance to a downward trend and are entering into a more definite period of stabilization.

The most important price changes for the week follow:

New prices for fall lines of woolens and worsteds were being issued ranging from 7½ to 10 per cent lower than a year ago. # COTTON PRICES CLOSE STEADY

NEW YORK, March 14.—Trading in cotton was quiet today and price changes were confirmed within comparatively narrow limits. At the outset the market was slightly lower in response to lower Liverpool cables than had been anticipated and under moderate week-end liquidation and more or less selling for foreign and southern account.

Offers proved small, however, and the market subsequently developed a steady tone in covering and trade buying. The May position declined early to 10.79, a loss of 3 points from the previous close and later advanced to 10.85, closing at 10.83, a net gain of 1 point while the general market closed steady at 2 points higher to 2 points lower.

The amount of cotton on shipboard awaiting clearance at the end of the week was estimated at 116,000 bales against 135,000 a year ago and 111,000 two years ago.

GRAIN MARKET CLOSES UNEVEN

CHICAGO, March 14.—(AP.)—Breaking of the season's bottom price record for wheat resulted today from liberal sized future delivery wheat sales matched by simultaneous purchases of corn. This proceeding had to do entirely with July and September wheat, representing the 1931 crop yet to be harvested. Numerous standing orders to buy new crop wheat were brought into action on the downturn, and rallies were in progress at the finish.

Wheat closed irregular, ⅝ cents lower to ⅛@¼ advance, corn ⅛ off to ⅜ up, oats unchanged to ¼ down, and provisions unchanged to a rise of 7 cents.

Kentucky National Receiver Will Test Bank Liability Law

LOUISVILLE, March 14.—Stockholders of Bankokentucky Company face an assessment unless the company can produce $3,783,388, its liability under the banking law.

Although liability of stockholders of a bank holding company has never before been tested, Paul C. Keyes, receiver for the National Bank of Kentucky, states legal preparations are being made to obtain an assessment should it be necessary after recovery has been made from the directors who, Mr. Keyes pointed out, are liable for losses sustained by the bank on loans in excess of 10 per cent. In the National Bank of Kentucky, one of the Bankokentucky group, there were several loans over the 10 per cent limit where permanent losses are anticipated. There are 2,400,000 shares of Bankokentucky outstanding.

NEW NATIONAL STEEL MILLS START RUNNING

Next Step Will Be Taken With $50,000,000 Plants To Be Built at Chicago.

By GEORGE H. SNYDER

With the completion of the new merchant mill of the National Steel Corporation at Detroit, the organization has carried out the major portion of its $32,000,000 expansion program, started over a year ago to round out its operating facilities. The company was formed at the close of 1930 by the consolidation of Weirton Steel, Great Lakes Steel and the blast furnace and ore properties of the M. A. Hanna Company.

A short time ago it further expanded operations by acquiring the Michigan Steel Company to increase its production of finished steel in the Detroit market. National is the only major steel company with plants close to the automobile producers in the Detroit district.

IN TWO DISTRICTS

National now has steel plants in two of the most important producing districts. In addition to Detroit, it has its largest operations in the vicinity of Weirton, W. Va. Production at Buffalo is confined to the output of merchant pig iron.

The next step will be extension of operations to the Chicago district, where about $50,000,000 will be spent within the next three years, according to present plans.

The 14-inch merchant mill just completed at Detroit has a production capacity of 15,000 tons a month. The only remaining unit to be finished in the program is a 10-inch merchant mill to be ready by July 1.

EARNED $4.01

National Steel made an outstanding record last year by reporting earnings of $4.01 a share. This was twice its dividend requirements of $2 a share and was accomplished without the aid of a large portion of the new mills.

The new mill and structural steel mill at Weirton was not completed until last December. Recent additions to capacity have made National the sixth largest steel company in the United States.

IMPROVEMENT CONTINUED IN STOCK MARKET

Short Covering Plays Big Part in Firmness—Sales Moderate—Radio Spurts.

By BROADAN WALL
Universal Service.

NEW YORK, March 14—Improvement in prices continued during today's short session on the Stock Exchange. Short covering played an important role in the continued firmness, although some renewal of aggressive bullish sponsorship was evident in a few favored issues, mostly of the speculative type.

Week-end trade reviews disclosed a gradual seasonal betterment, which as yet is of insufficient proportions to warrant great enthusiasm. But the market was content to show a reasonable further enhancement in values, with spectacular action confined to a relatively small group of highly speculative stocks. The price of silver advanced again, regaining the highest price of the year. Trading was on a moderate scale.

RADIO SPURTS

Columbia Graphophone continued one of the most active issues and reached a new high price. Radio spurted suddenly and closed almost 3 points net higher for the day.

Railroads as a group were backward and achieved only a small fractional net gain. New York Central rallied another point. This issue, now that the dividend has been cut, will meet scale investment buying on reactions. Baltimore and Ohio, another road whose dividend is insecure, probably will experience the same buying should its rate be lowered to $5, as generally expected. The stock is discounting such a reduction.

GAS IN LEAD

Consolidated Gas resumed leadership of the public utilities and these stocks as a group furnished most of the features. American and Foreign Power and International Telephone rallied with the list. Foreign Power was helped somewhat by its acquisition of another important property in India. The public utilities are counted upon to lift the engine market out of the rut and it is in these stocks that the greatest bullish activity is taking place. The discussion of mergers lends a ready explanation for any unusual activity in utilities.

Motors joined with the reminder of the market in the advance, although gains were moderate. Electric Autolite rallied vigorously as buying was resumed for the account of its strong sponsors.

HARMONY ONCE MORE RULES IN RESERVE BOARD

Banking System Becomes Less Melodramatic, More Efficient Under Meyer.

By MERRYLE S. RUKEYSER

WASHINGTON, March 14.—Under the leadership of Eugene Meyer, Jr., new governor of the Federal Reserve Board, whose appointment was recently confirmed by the Senate, the central banking system has become less melodramatic, but more efficient.

Mr. Rukeyser.

For the first time since the passing of the late Benjamin Strong, governor of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, who for years was the outstanding personality of the system, there is a commanding figure in the system to whom everyone looks for leadership.

Thus far, Mr. Meyer has been able to supply the dynamic leadership, which was lacking before.

MEMBERS DISAGREED

Prior to the panic, the effectiveness of the system was circumscribed by conflict of opinion among members of the Federal Reserve Board and between the board and certain regional banks. For example, the New York Federal Reserve Bank in the forepart of 1929 battled vainly for months with the Reserve Board in an effort to get permission to raise the rediscount rate sharply to check the inflation in the stock market. Moreover, the board itself was frequently hopelessly divided as to procedure, and it was time and again necessary to bring Secretary Mellon, ex-officio member, into deadlocked board meetings to cast the deciding vote.

With new leadership, the system has been in a more co-operative mood, and the drama of personal conflict has been eliminated.

NEW POLICY

Mr. Meyer's friends point out that the new governor thinks the Reserve System ought to be kept off the front page, and should cease to be a source of worry to the business and financial community. The new policy is to get the public to feel that the Reserve System can be counted upon to function constructively and helpfully in any situation which occurs.

The Meyer administration is still too young to be judged in any final, definite terms, but it is already part of the record that tranquility has been brought about.

The new idea is to make the system function quietly and unostentatiously, without intruding itself too much into the economic situation as a variable and uncertain factor, which might at any time upset the apple cart.

Shipments of Fruit To New York High

NEW YORK, March 14.—Four million tons of fresh fruit and vegetables, worth about $125,000,000, were shipped into New York City by rail and water lines during 1930, statisticians of the Pennsylvania railroad estimated today. They came from 42 states and 19 foreign countries.

Oldsmobile Plants On Full-Time Basis

DETROIT, March 14.—Oldsmobile factories are working on an increased production schedule this month which will exceed that of last March. All departments are working full time.

Cottonseed Oil Market.

NEW YORK, March 14.—Cottonseed oil was moderately active today, with the tone improving steadily due to a little wire house demand promoted by firmness in crude oil and lard and the steadiness in hogs. The closing was firm with prices 4 to 10 points net higher.

Sales were 1,500 barrels. Prime crude, 6.62½@75; prime summer yellow spot, 7.65. March closed, 7.65; May, 7.90; July, 8.04; Sept., 8.11.

CARE OF CHICKS IMPORTANT TO OUTPUT OF EGGS

Spring Pullets Become Layers by Next Winter; Brooders Important

By PROF. F. H. STONEBURN
Poultry Editor, The Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph

During March, April and early May the majority of the pullets which this coming winter will fill America's laying pens will be started off in life. There is some variation in the time required to develop to full laying maturity pullets of different strains of the same breed and the poultrymen themselves differ in their ability to secure the required growth.

Mr. Stoneburn

In any balanced program of poultry production there is place for the extra-early pullets as discussed previously in these columns and also for a certain number of late ones. But the largest part of the pullets intended for winter laying will be the baby chicks produced during the next few weeks.

At present the great bulk of our annual chicken crop is grown under portable brooders of some type, and the colony brooder house is in great favor. Where possible these structures should be of the portable type so they may be moved to fresh ground in case of need. These structures are made in a wide variety of sizes. But, whatever the dimensions and type, the building should be tightly constructed to fully protect the tender youngsters, yet be capable of being well opened up to sun and air as the season advances and free ventilation is required.

If it is possible an electric wire should be carried into the brooder house in order to provide a dim light during the hours of darkness. In case electricity is not available a dependable and safe lantern of some type may be substituted.

The lights offer an advantage in that any chicks needing feed or water can make their way to the feeders and founts and not be compelled to wait for day to break before they can secure the needed supplies. Chicks grown under lights, as suggested, invariably make greater growth in a given period than those which are kept in dark pens.

The breeders of general purpose fowls, producers of brown-shelled eggs, are jubilant over the growing popularity of the dusky hen fruit. Even in New York, long the stronghold of the white egg, brown eggs of good quality are frequently selling at a premium over the whites. For instance, during the month of December the price of brown eggs sold from the New York State Egg Laying Contest plant averaged one per cent per dozen over whites of corresponding grade. During one week they enjoyed an advantage of three cents.

This advantage usually disappears as the warm weather comes on and, because of heating and other deterioration, market stock must be closely candled.

Rotate Flowers And Garden Crops

In planting flowers and vegetables this year, endeavor not to place the same kinds where they were last year. Plant fibrous-rooted plants where the dahlias and gladioli were last season, and so with other things.

In the vegetable garden where root crops—such as beets, carrots, or parsnips — were grown, plant such things as lettuce, cabbage and spinach. This is called "rotating crops," and it is an importanip rocedure.

GREENE PULLET STATE CHAMP

A white leghorn pullet, owned by Ben W. Jacobs, Greene County, laid 327 eggs during the past year, winning top place in the Record of Performance Work conducted by the bureau of markets, Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture, the bureau has announced.

Eight hundred and ninety birds out of 4,600 entered in this work laid more than 200 eggs as pullets or 180 eggs as hens during the year. These were in 11 flocks located in nine counties.

CUT FLOWERS REQUIRE CARE

Roses, orchids, lilies, carnations, chrysanthemums, spring flowers and calendulas are the longest keeping of the flowers, according to the findings of the New York State College of Agriculture. With the exception of the chrysanthemum, all of these flowers should receive a slanting cut at the base of the stem and be placed in deep, cool water which should be changed daily. The chrysanthemum stem should be mashed and then placed in cold water.

If the flowers are to be used in a warm room, they should be removed at night and floated in a large basin of water and their stems cut slightly before returning to their vases next morning. With this treatment flowers should last a week or more, they say.

USE OF LIME FOUND BENEFIT IN AGRICULTURE

Recent Tests Disclose Proper Application Aids Growth of Many Plants

By EDWARD C. VICK
Garden Editor, Sun-Telegraph.

The use of lime in agriculture was discovered over 3,000 years ago, and the correct use of lime has not been understood since that time, P. H. Wessels, of the Long Island Vegetable Research Farm, said recently at Cornell University.

Mr. Vick

Until recent years no accurate way of measuring the amount of acidity of soils has been found. A soil was either acid or alkaline, and lime was used accordingly.

Beets, lettuce, onions, spinach are sensitive to a sour soil, he stated, while cauliflower and muskmelons are less so. Most vegetables grow best on land that is slightly acid or neutral. When a soil gets too acid, toxic or poisonous compounds are formed, while if a soil has too much lime, desirable plant foods are deposited at the surface, making them useless to plants.

Tests are now used which show by a change in the color of the solution how acid or alkaline a soil sample really is and show the amount of lime necessary to change a sour soil to alkaline.

The removal of bases such as calcium in the drainage water makes soil acid. Ordinary hard water contains these bases. Their removal is hastened by agricultural cultivation, though it takes place rapidly even in forest soils. The application of lime replaces these bases. Only a few fertilizers lessen acidity. Of these, calcium cyanide, calcium nitrate, basic slag and nitrate of soda are the most important, but their effect is not so great as lime in sweetening the soil.

Ground limestone is easier to handle than other forms and is usually cheaper, though it is about one-third more bulky than the hydrated form. Burnt lime is hard to handle and must be slaked, which is a disagreeable job.

Ammonium sulfate increases acidity. However, where a soil is neutral or alkaline, it may be best to use it. Moreover it furnishes a pound of ammonia cheaper than nitrate of soda. It takes about one pound of the ground limestone to counteract the acidity of one pound of sulphate of ammonia.

Duquesne vs. Scott at Stadium Wednesday.

History Repeats as Bridenbaugh Team Loses by Same Margin as in '30.

By JESS CARVER

By 20 to 17, Duquesne High School eliminated New Castle High School from the 1931 W. P. I. A. L. championship basketball tournament in the Stadium last night with close to 4,000 looking on. Duquesne won by three points less than separated the same teams in the semi-final round of the tourney last year.

As a result of last night's triumph Duquesne will meet Scott High, of North Braddock, in the championship final next Wednesday night. Duquesne lost to New Kensington in the finale last year.

Last night's tussle was far from being the most interesting or the

Robins Top Phils; Chisox Beat Giants

CLEARWATER, Fla., March 14.—(AP.)—In an old fashioned Phillies-Robin slugfest, Brooklyn pounded out a 13-to-11 decision over Philadelphia today.

The Robins connected for 16 hits, nine of which were bunched in the first two innings to score 10 runs. The Phillies were almost as powerful at the plate, hitting safely 14 times, but four errors helped the Robins to victory.

Babe Herman, who signed his contract today, started for the Robins in right field, but retired after playing three innings. The score by innings:

INDIANS TOP PELICANS

NEW ORLEANS, March 14.—(INS.)—Loose fielding enabled Cleveland to down New Orleans 10 to 9, here today in a heavy hitting pre-season baseball fracas.

Each team got 16 hits, but New Orleans made six errors. Score by innings:

BROWNS DEFEATED

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla., March 14.—(AP.)—The Columbus Redbirds, of the American Association, which club is now partly owned by the St. Louis Cardinals, defeated the Browns this afternoon, 7 to 3.

It was the Browns' first exhibition game against a team in organized baseball. Columbus scored six of its runs off George Blaeholder, four of them coming in the second inning. The score by innings:

CHI SOX BEAT GIANTS

SAN ANTONIO, Tex., March 14.—(AP.)—The Chicago White Sox drew first blood in their spring exhibition series with the New York Giants today, defeating the men of John McGraw, 5 to 2.

The Sox seemed to take kindly to the shoots of Joe Heving and Carl Hubbell, McGraw's pitching selections, Chalmers Cissell and Willie Kamm helping themselves to home runs. Cissell also pounded out a triple and a single and forced three runs. The score by innings:

PENSACOLA, March 14.—(INS.)—Louisville, of the American Association, engaged the Boston Red Sox in a combat here today but lost the count, 4 to 2.

By CARL W. SHATTO.

Pittsburgh's Yellow Jacket puckmen gained undisputed possession of fourth place in the International League hockey race at Duquesne Garden last night when they defeated the Syracuse Stars, 6 to 3, while the London Tecumsehs, their play-off berth rivals, were losing to the Cleveland Indians, 4 to 3, at Cleveland.

The Jackets are to meet the Tecumsehs in London next Tuesday, and the question of which club is to get into the title series probably will be answered at that time. Should the Jackets win in London, the Tecumsehs will have to win every game remaining on their schedule to keep Pittsburgh out of the championship series.

JACKETS TOO STRONG

Although weakened as a result of injuries being nursed by Gordy Fraser, defense ace, and Duke McCurry, sturdy forward, the local icemen presented their most brilliant and sustained attack of the season in downing Syracuse last night. They rammed home two goals to one for the Stars in each period, and they showered Goalie Ironstone, of Syracuse, with hot shots from the start to the finish of the fight.

Eddie Rodden, diminutive center, played the leading role in Pittsburgh's victory drive. In the first period he gave McGuire and Gregg fine assists that enabled them to score, and after 32 seconds of play in the second stanza he

Frank Smith Theos Manos

HO HUM!—Once more, for the fifth successive year, Smith and Manos yesterday carried off the local senior handball title, beating Lou Alman and Frank Altmar in straight sets. They also have shared the singles title between them year after year, with Manos the present holder and Smith the runner-up.

SMITH-MANOS RETAIN TITLE

Frank Smith and Theos Manos, both wearing the colors of the Keystone A. C. retained their A. M. A. handball doubles championship yesterday by defeating Lou Alman and Frank Altmar, of the Y. M. H. A., in the final of the annual A. M. A. tournament at the Keystone A. C. yesterday. Smith and Manos won in straight sets, 21-9 and 21-12.

Scott Burke, Jr.

In the deciding match of the tourney, J. Scott Burke, Jr., of the P. A. A., won in straight sets over Dave Gilmore, of the Allegheny Country Club, 15-12, 15-7 and 10-9, to annex the association title.

Smith and Manos, who have alternated in holding both the city and the A. M. A. singles handball titles for the past five years, have won the doubles crown for the same length of time. Yesterday they won the first game with ease, and in the second, after the Y. M. H. A. pair spurted to bring the score to 12-10, Smith and Manos forged to the front and tallied 11 points while the opposition was recording two.

Burke, after a tough first set with Gilmore, had the situation well in hand during the remaining two sets. The title was the first to be annexed by Burke, who is rated as one of the best of the Pittsburgh district squash racquets players.

Capacity turnouts witnessed both the handball and squash racquets engagements.

Buc Southpaw Ace Compromises, Ends Stubborn Holdout

Babe Gets $19,000: Cards Silent on Frankie's Salary: Vance, Hafey Still Out.

CLEARWATER, Fla., March 14.—(INS.)—Babe Herman, heavy-hitting right fielder of the Brooklyn Robins, who has been a persistent holdout, today signed his 1931 contract, which calls for a salary of $19,000. Herman had been holding out for $20,000.

The signing of Herman dissipates one half of the Brooklyn hold-out problem. The sole remaining holdout is Dazzy Vance, the fire ball pitcher. Vance continues to be insistent in his demand for $25,000.

FRISCH SIGNS

BRADENTON, Fla., March 14.—(AP.)—After a five-minute conference with President Sam Breadon, Frankie Frisch, captain and second baseman of the St. Louis Cardinals, today signed his 1931 contract. Terms were not made public. Chick Hafey, outfielder, is now the only unsigned player.

SWETONIC OUT SOON

Steve Swetonic, Pirates' pitcher, likely will be released not later than tomorrow from St. John's Hospital on the North Side, where he underwent an operation a few days ago for the chipped condition of his pitching elbow.

Terms of Larry's Capitulation Called "Satisfactory;" P. Waner in Line.

By CHARLES J. DOYLE
Staff Correspondent.

PASO ROBLES, Cal., March 14.—Larry French, aggressive left-hand pitcher of the Pittsburgh Pirates, who has been the team's only prominent holdout, today signed a contract for this season.

Neither Manager Ens nor the young twirler would divulge the amount of salary agreed upon, but it was obvious a compromise figure had been reached. Both gave the impression the salary settlement was entirely satisfactory. Larry appeared to be tickled that he was back in the fold. He is off to a fine start in conditioning, having had several good workouts to date.

Pirate Regulars Swamp Yans, 10-1

By CHARLES J. DOYLE
Staff Correspondent

PASO ROBLES, Cal., March 14.—The last squad battle of the Pirate training season was staged this afternoon, the Yanigans taking a bitter pasting from the Regulars. The first team sharpshooters continued the dizzy pace, exemplified in the last week, the score being 10 to 1.

The bewildered Hooligans scored their lone tally in the last round, it being their only tally in 20 rounds of competition with the Regular pitchers. Dutch Brandt and Jack Mealey doubled, with two out, to produce the marker.

Remy Kremer and Glenn Spencer showed Fourth of July form as they pitched the Yans into a wild state of confusion. Frenchy took the shorter route, he retiring after four rounds of delightful flinging. Kremer's curve ball was exceptional.

Spencer picked up the baton and directed the defense without a flaw until two were out in the ninth. Glenn, too, had a "Jughandle Johnny" on display and his fast ball cracked into his catcher's glove with firecracker effect.

Jim Mosolf featured the one-sided fight with one of the longest homers yet struck in the big ball park. Jim's fifth-inning crash went high and dry over the right center wall. Suhr also scored on the blow. In the first inning, Jim missed a homer with the bases loaded when his wallop to right hit the top of the right field fence. The drive netted a double.

Collegiate Boxing.

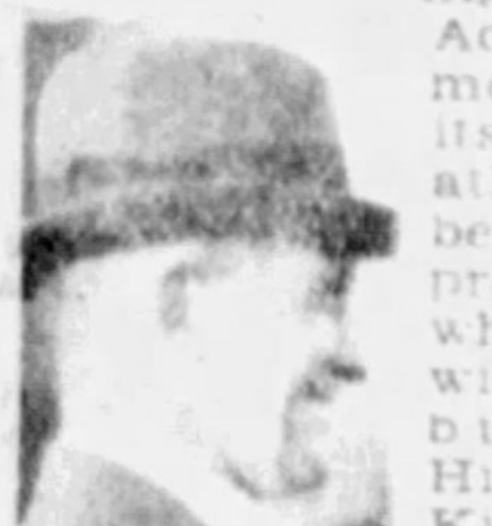
By HARRY KECK
Sports Editor

The famous bowl athletic field of Shady Side Academy's old place at Morewood and Ellsworth avenues is being leveled off to provide more playing room for the junior department athletes now quartered there, the Academy itself having been moved out Fox Chapel Road was some time ago. Speaking of Shady Side Academy at the moment recalls its salad days in athletics at the beginning of the present century when it ranked with old Pittsburgh Central High School and Kiski as a leader in prep circles in Pittsburgh and its football team knocked off Pitt (then WUP, Western University of Pennsylvania) in what was to have been a practice game for WUP at Exposition Park, the score being 6-0.



Rex Flinn

The prominent Shady Side athletes of that era included such notables as Rex Flinn, now head of Booth & Flinn, the contracting concern, then a football and hockey star who later performed at Yale; Sam Crothers, now a broker here, after starring as a center at Princeton; Chuck Rowe, Powder [illegible], the fullback; Walter T. Grange, now a prominent local contractor, then a football end and captain of the baseball team; Bill (Swell) Armstrong, later a star hurdler at Princeton, now a millionaire oil man in California; Charles (Dutch) Armstrong, now in the steel business here, and Arch Williams, who was a major in the Army during the World War.

Hugh Jennings

Pop McCall was coach of Kiski in those days and now he is president of the Saltsburg school. A. E. Young of Amherst, now an attorney here, was coach at Shady Side and the late H. B. Cooper was coach at Pittsburgh Central High School, which turned out great teams. The other high schools in Pittsburgh at the time were Allegheny High and South Side High. Phil Lewis was the outstanding local scholastic athlete. He now resides in Plattsburg, N. Y., where he is in the lumber business. He probably was the best baseball player ever turned out in the local high schools and also starred in hockey and football. After leaving Central High, he matriculated at Cornell University where Hugh Jennings, later manager of the Detroit Tigers, was coach, and Hughey subsequently took him to Baltimore, from where he went to Brooklyn, playing shortstop. He finally became embroiled in an argument over salary with Charley Ebbets, the Brooklyn owner, and was railroaded out of the National League to Milwaukee via the waiver route, although both the Giants and Phillies would have liked to have had him.

Inspired by the old-time baseball reminiscences of James B. Brown, of Beechview, which appeared in the Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph last Sunday, J. W. Storys, of Avalon, writes:

"Permit me to take friendly issue with some of Mr. Brown's recollections. He says he remembers when Ed Morris was starting out as a pitcher here. Morris was a native of California and was pitching for the Columbus (O.) team when the entire club was purchased and transferred to old Recreation Park in Allegheny avenue, Allegheny City. With him came Pitcher Frank Mountain, Catcher Fred Carroll, First Baseman Stromberg and others. From this it will be seen that Morris was a finished product when he came here, and he remained a great pitcher until the rules were changed to prohibit the hop, step and jump delivery. Mountain had a sore arm when he came here and soon dropped out. Stromberg died in the middle of a season and Alex McKinnon followed him as first baseman after Carroll had played the position for a time because of his hitting strength. Miller did the catching while Carroll played first. In those days, the catcher took the ball on the bounce and put on the mask only for the fourth strike. They had four strikes and seven balls at the time.

"Just a word about Miller. He was known as Foggy Miller, not Doggy Miller, and the nickname came from his coaching. Due to his loud voice, the fans first called him Foghorn and then contracted it to Foggy. He also was known as Calliope. Ginger Beaumont and Jake Beckley came later and were not considered old-timers. The team aside from the batteries in those old Recreation days consisted of Fred Mann, Swartzwood, a Pittsburgh boy, and Tom Brown in the outfield; Stromberg, first base; Sam Barkley, second base; Pop Smith,

JEAN BOROTRA, SHIELDS LEAD VICTORY MARCH

Boussus and Landry, Other Racqueters from Overseas, Advance With French Ace.

Sutter Easily Gains Second Round; Matches Are Decided in Straight Sets.

NEW YORK, March 14.—(AP.)—Headed by Jean Borotra, three-time indoor champion, and Francis X. Shields, all of the French and American seeded players today advanced to the second round by straight-set victories in the first day of play of the men's national singles indoor championship tournament on the courts of the Seventh Regiment Armory.

Christian Boussus and Pierre Landry, the other two French competitors, advanced after straight sets while the American contingent of Clifford Sutter, Berkeley Bell, Herbert L. Bowman, William Aydellotte, Donald H. Cram and P. G. Rockafellow all survived easily.

SELIGSON WITHDRAWS

Fourth place in the list, held by Julius Seligson, former intercollegiate champion, was vacated when Seligson was compelled to withdraw on account of a broken arm.

Borotra, winner in 1925, 1927 and 1929, drew the greatest gallery of the day in turning in a 6-1, 6-1 victory over A. J. Wadsworth, of New York. The French ace was somewhat unsteady at the start of his match, but soon settled down and gave a fine performance.

In winning from Eugene S. McCauliff, former Fordham University captain, Christian Boussus, second seeded Frenchman, provided one of the closest matches of the day. McCauliff had an advantage over the visiting star as the match opened, but Boussus rallied in the last four games to clinch the first set. He won the second in good style. The score was 6-3, 6-3.

SUTTER EASY WINNER

Clifford Sutter, second seeded American intercollegiate titleholder, was the easiest winner of the day, triumphing over Sidney Berger, of New York, in love sets. Donald Cram, of Nashville, Tenn., seventh seeded competitor, was slightly extended by Lincoln Halberstadt, of New York, though winning in two sets, 6-3, 6-4.

Play will be suspended tomorrow, but resumed Monday afternoon. Borotra will play Lieut. R. W. Watt, Jr., of the West Side Tennis Club, while Shields will face Irving W. Raymond, of Columbia University.

FRENCH SIGNS BUC CONTRACT

one important respect. His earned run average was better than that of any other regular and he was second highest in the league in the matter of innings pitched. Remy Kremer was one inning ahead of him.

HIS THIRD SEASON

Larry won 17 games and lost 18 last season, a mark he hardly could hold up as a championship performance.

With the date of departure from their Paso Robles camp only two days away, Pirate prospects are looking up. Manager Jewel Ens today expressed keen satisfaction over what he terms the most successful training season since the Pittsburghers came to this faroff state to train. The Buccos will break camp Monday afternoon, their next destination to be San Francisco.

P. WANER UNSIGNED

Paul Waner is now the only unsigned member of the squad. There is some slight misunderstanding about Paul's contract which can easily be ironed out.

"We have agreed on my salary and the other little things are more or less a matter of form," said Brother Paul today in discussing why he had not signed.

The elder of the famous brothers has to be careful of his lanced leg, but he is able to partake of light workouts.

Manager Ens as late as today did not wish to go on official record as to how his 1931 squad will be composed, but the accompanying classification of players to be retained may be considered as being quite definite.

Pitchers—Kremer, Brame, Spencer, Mein, Willoughby, Grant, French and Wood. Bednar will be carried for a spell and he may land a regular berth.

Catchers—Phillips, Hemsley and Finney or Mealey.

Infielders—Suhr, Grantham, Thevenow, Capt. Traynor, Regan, Sankey and Clarke or Piet.

Outfielders—Paul Waner, Lloyd Waner, Comorosky, Mosolf and Jensen or McClanahan.

ENS IN QUANDARY

There is a strong likelihood that Ens will be able to stay down to the 25-player limit right from the jump-off, although this rule does not go into effect until June 15. He is almost sure to carry nine pitchers for part of the season, and maybe will keep 10 around for a month or so.

Steve Swetonic, of course, should be included, but until Steve regains his pitching strength, Ens will have to be fortified.

Ens is in somewhat of a quandary about his third catcher. He is sold on Hal Finney, who may be said to be the most impressive rookie in the big squad. But Jack Mealey is a master in handling Curve-Ball Wood, of South Carolina. Eddie Phillips and Rolly Hemsley are regarded as the two first-stringers at present.

The manager smiles when he dwells on his first-string infield and he has happy dreams of his reserve strength for the first defense. He will carry seven infielders for a spell. Ens wants to see how Tony Piet will come along as a third sacker before he decides as between Tony and Stewie Clarke.

1930 OUTFIELD INTACT

The great outfield of last season is likely to be intact. Jim Mosolf will be one of the extra pasture workers with Woodie Jensen and Pete McClanahan fighting it out for the other utility berth. Pete is a right-hander. He seems to have a golden opportunity.

All in all, the complexion of the club will not be greatly changed from last season, yet there is a very important switch in a significant position. Tommy Thevenow will prevail in the shortfield, and Thomas looks like a wonder-worker so far. His hitting is exceptional.

The Buccos will start their fireworks around San Francisco Bay with two games in Oakland. These will be played Tuesday and Wednesday. On Thursday the Pirates will get their first action in the fine new park in San Francisco. They will tangle with the Detroit Tigers on that big occasion. The Cubs will then be met in three games on the same field.

THE INVOICE PRESENTED TO THE SWISS GOVERNMENT—An old Swiss church decided to repair its properties and employed an artist to touch up its paintings. After some differences developed between the artist and the church committee, the former appealed to the government for settlement, submitting this bizarre itemized bill. Its diminutive size (less than an inch square) was an added unique feature.

Kraffert Leader In Tin Whistles

PINEHURST, N. C., March 14.—(AP.)—Ben F. Kraffert, Titusville, Pa., shot a 74 today to take the lead in the first 18 holes of the Tin Whistles Club's annual 36-medal play tournament. The final 18 holes will be played Monday. Richard S. Tufts, Pinehurst, 1929 champion, turned in a 79. Eighty golfers participated.

most hectic of the tourney. Neither of the competing teams played anything that resembled championship ball, Duquesne winning out with a rally in the final period.

SERVICK BIG STAR

It was this clever fellow, Al Servick, who led the Duquene parade last night. Servick was high scorer of the game with three field goals and two fouls, a total of eight points. He dropped two of his three buckets in the very important last period, practically icing the struggle.

The speedy and plucky New Castle entry, coached by Phil Bridenbaugh, received a very, very tough break in the important final period when Andy Lasky was ejected from the ball game on the four personal foul route. A foul was called on Lasky which he did not commit, and after his departure from the struggle both the New Castle offense and defense went to smithereens.

At the completion of the initial quarter Duquesne led by 6 to 4, a field goal by the very efficient Al Servick, two fouls by Karpowich and one each by Durick and Alexandrovich accounting for the half dozen Duquesne points. New Castle counted on a field goal by Johnny Shaffer and a brace of charity shots by Johnny Uram.

The Lawrence Countians reestablished their advantage at the intermission by taking a 10-to-8 lead. Lasky dumped in a field goal and Johnny Uram, Shaffer and Ludwig Ostrosky recorded fouls. Duquesne's lone marker resulted from Karpowich's field goal.

BACKERS CONFIDENT

Those who were rooting for and betting on New Castle remained confident as Phil Bridenbaugh's charges sped into the final quarter only a point in the rear. Ludwig Ostrosky's field goal provided New Castle with two points, while Alexandrovich personally conducted a field goal through the net, and Servick and Zeleznik sank free tosses. New Castle trailed by 12 to 13 as the fourth period was inaugurated.

However, it was more than too bad for New Castle in the last eight minutes. After Ostrosky made a bid for tournament immortality with a splendidly thrown field goal to give his team a 14-13 advantage, both the attack and defense of the Bridenbaugh trained passers faltered and finally succumbed to the undeniable power of Duquesne's attack.

Hardly had the echoes of the cheers that greeted Ostrosky's goal subsided, when this inimitable Servick person one-handed a shot from the side. Alexandrovich followed with a foul and Servick with his third and final field goal. This fetched the score to 18-14.

SUB SCORES BASKET

As if to make matters certain, Muir, a Duquesne substitute, threw a splendid goal from well out at sea. At this juncture, the costly foul that removed Lasky from the combat was blown by Umpire Al Walsh. Lasky went out, and with him out went the hopes of New Castle.

Hanlon's long goal which bounded about on the rim of the hoop before swishing through, and Ned Uran's foul completed the scoring for the very so-so struggle.

DUKES STAND OUT

The erasure for the second year in succession was tragically disappointing to the host of New Castle supporters. New Castle put up a courageous battle against the size and range of the formidable Duquesne hosts, which, as I have reported before, has dashed magnificently through to the final round of its second W. P. I. A. L. tournament.

Duquesne will take the floor against Scott, of North Bradock, the under dog in the wagering, but if the team displays the same grit and determination that was

CONGER BOWS TO VENZKE IN MILE FEATURE

Lermond Also Beats Veteran To Tape at K. of C. Games in New York.

Spencer, Geneva, Ties With Anton Burg for First Place In High Jump Event.

NEW YORK, March 14.—(AP.)—With Ray Conger suffering his second straight defeat at a mile, the curtain was rung down on the eastern indoor track season tonight in the annual Knights of Columbus games, once the glamorous stamping grounds of Paavo Nurmi and Lloyd Hahn.

It was more or less an anticlimax to a season that had seen several records fall. None was lowered tonight nor was one even seriously threatened.

Gene Venzke's feat in winning the Columbian Mile, with Conger third, behind Leo Lermond, and Joe McCluskey's victory in the two-mile run, were the high lights of the meet.

Venzke barely beat Lermond, Boston A. A. ace, to the tape in the fair time of 4:14 2-5. Conger was five yards back, closer than when Carl Coan, of Pennsylvania, beat him a few weeks ago on the same track, but still soundly beaten.

LOSES ON JUMP-OFF

McCluskey caused the greatest outburst of cheering in winning his event, after lapping all of the starting field of 15 except Gus Moore and leaving the Brooklyn Negro a half lap behind and gasping for breath. McCluskey's time was 9:15 3-5.

Fred Sturdy, of the Los Angeles A. C.; Anton Burg, of the Illinois A. C., and Howard Spencer, of Geneva College, held up the marks in the pole vault and high jump, respectively, but their efforts were behind their best marks this year. Sturdy won the pole vault at 13 feet 9 inches, while Burg and Spencer tied in the high jump at 6 feet 5½ inches, Burg winning the jump-off.

Shady Side Trio Wallops Vangs

The Shady Side Academy riders defeated the Vangs in a Pittsburgh Polo League match in the Hunt Armory last night, 17 to 4½.

| Shady Side—17 | | Vangs—4½ |
|---|---|---|
| Asron | No. 1 | Grandon |
| McCahill | No. 2 | Vang |
| McCreery | No. 3 | Milholland |

Draw Announced for W. Va. State School Tourney

HUNDRED PLAYS MARLINTON IN FIRST ROUND

Wheeling and Washington-Irving Loom as Threats To Wetzel Countians.

BUCKHANNON, W. Va., March 14.—(AP.)—The drawings for the first round of the state basketball tournament, to be played at West Virginia Wesleyan College here next Friday were announced today as flolows:

UPPER BRACKET.
Shinnston vs. Logan, 9:20 a. m.
Hundred vs. Marlinton, 9:40 a. m.
Montgomery vs. Wheeling, 10:40 a. m.
Huntington vs. Terra Alta, 11 a. m.
LOWER BRACKET.
West Union vs. Beckley, 1:40 p. m.
Washington Irving vs. Princeton, 2 p. m.
Charleston vs. Buckhannon, 3:20 p. m.
Parkersburg vs. Shepherdstown, 3:20 p. m.

BEGINS FRIDAY

After the 16 sectional winners have played the first round, eliminating half their number, the tri-finals will be held Friday evening, starting at 7 o'clock. The semi-finals will be run off Saturday afternoon and the third place and championship contests Saturday evening.

The tournament, which is the eighteenth annual meet, will see Hundred High School, representing a little Wetzel County community, defending its title. Hundred is playing the same boys who won last year's laurels and is one of the favorites to repeat.

But the "Green Shirt" team, as Hundred is known because a former coach, now deceased, wore such raiment as a good luck charm, will have plenty of opposition.

Wheeling, titlist in 1928 and 1929, will not capitulate without a hard fight, and another is doped as Washington Irving, of Clarksburg, 1930 runner-up.

DOPE MEANINGLESS

Predictions, though, were made for favorites. With 16 of the state's best scholastic squad involved in the Wesleyan gym strife, prognostications don't mean a thing.

The draw was held Friday evening. There were no seeded teams and the 16 sectional victors were divided into Northern and Southern divisions in order to eliminate the possibility of teams like Wheeling and Hundred, both of the North, playing in a first-round game. The draw, therefore, reveals a Northern and Southern opponent coming together in each first-round contest.

K. M. Ross, director of athletics at Wesleyan, tonight notified coaches of the 16 teams regarding their first game and their opponent, the advices going out by telegraph.

Plans are nearly complete for the 1931 tournament.

Announcement was made today that the same officials who handled last year's tournament, Russell Finsterwald and B. T. Grover, both of Athens, O., will be in charge of this year's championship games.

Toss of Coin Wins Title for Clarion

CLARION, Pa., March 14.—A toss of a coin gave the Clarion High School girls' basketball team the championship of Clarion, Venango and Jefferson Counties over Knox tonight when the final battle of the tournament, played at Knox, ended in a 13-13 deadlock. After the teams had played an extra period of three minutes, neither side scoring, it was decided to toss a coin and Clarion was the winner.

In the consolation final, Beechwood defeated Franklin, 22 to 9. Clarion defeated Beechwood and Knox defeated Franklin to advance to the semi-finals. The lineups:

Plaid Rifle Team Loses to Middies

ANNAPOLIS, Md., March 14.—The rifle team of Annapolis Midshipmen, which has been disposing of all foes this season, took the representatives of Carnegie Tech into camp in a shoulder-to-shoulder contest here today by a team score of 1,369 to 1,333.

The firing was from prone, kneeling and standing positions, and the Middies gained an advantage over the vistors in each respect. The closest result was at standing, Navy leading 421 to 413.

Midshipman Hain was high gun for the match with a score of 280, which included a perfect mark at prone shooting. Painter led the visitors with a 269. The scores:

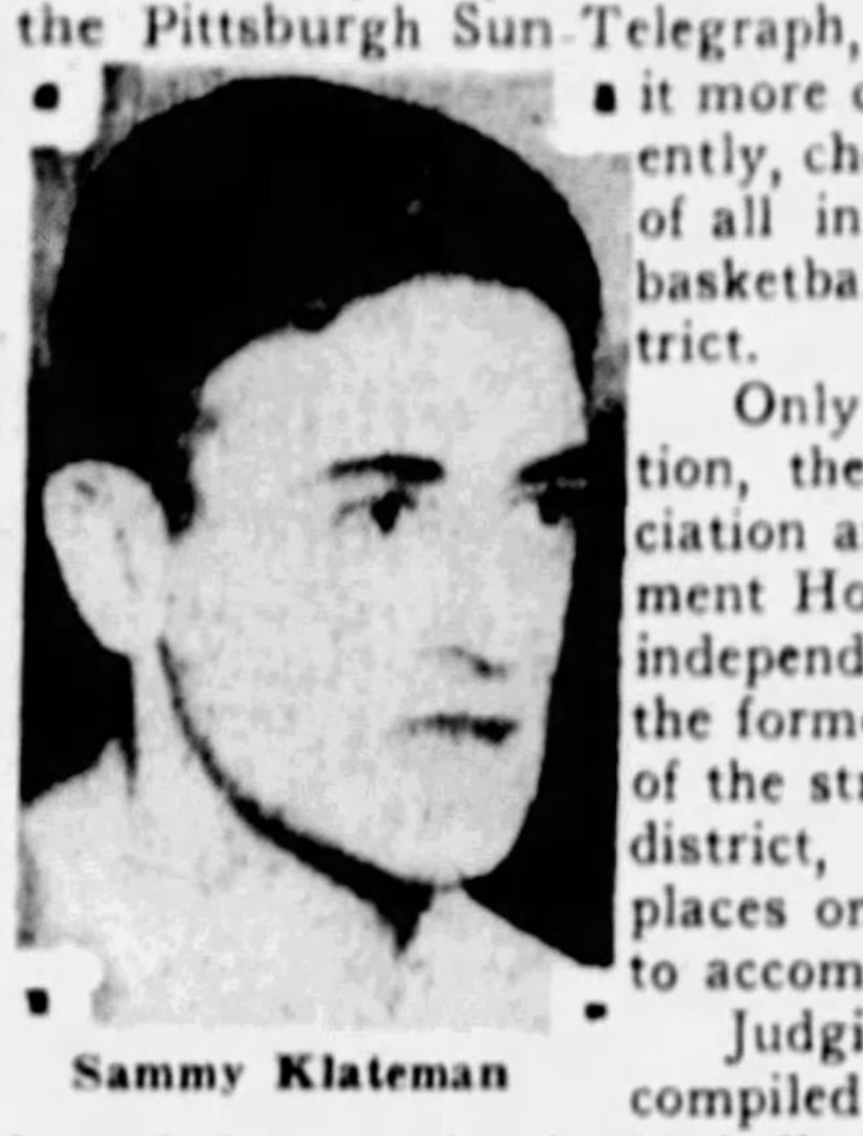
By JULIUS LEVIN



Sammy Klateman

Unlike previous seasons when all-star selections were confined entirely to performers in the Allegheny County League, the Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph, in fairness to teams that find it more convenient to operate independently, chooses its players from the ranks of all independent clubs engaged in basketball in the Greater Pittsburgh district.

Only two first-class clubs in this section, the Young Men's Hebrew Association and the Irene Kaufmann Settlement House, made a success of playing independent basketball this season, and the former, without the least doubt one of the strongest quintets in the tri-state district, succeeded in winning two places on the first team, the only club to accomplish this feat.

Judging from the remarkable record compiled by the Young Men's Hebrew Association varsity basketball team during the current season few will deny the contention that this quintet is one of the most powerful in this section. The Bellefielders, following their dismissal from the West Penn League for using an ineligible player, met and defeated some of the strongest teams in the East, the cream of local amateur and professional leagues as well as the outstanding independent quintets.

COUNTY CHAMPS BEATEN

Besides scoring victories over the Cleveland Pennzoils, Cumberland Kaceys, the Bellefielders defeated Fintex, first half Allegheny County League champion, in two out of three games and also scored an impressive victory over the Duquesne Lafayettes, second half victors in the same loop and for five years County League titleholder. This club has beaten virtually every team that scored a victory over it in earlier games. Charleroi, of the Allegheny County League, boasts a one-point decision over the Bellefielders, representing a forfeited contest resulting when the Y. M. H. A. walked off the floor following a disagreement over the rules with the official. This defeat at Charleroi will not be avenged as the clubs will not meet in a return contest.

Despite the fact that Pittsburgh boasts a wealth of independent basketball teams, the Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph's selections, besides the three players chosen from the ranks of the Young Men's Hebrew Association, are composed entirely of the cream of talent found in the Allegheny County and West Penn leagues. The Allegheny County League is the outstanding professional loop in the district, while the West Penn organization is the standard-bearer of the amateurs.

Bobby Angelo

Izzy Clovsky

Sammy Klateman, whose injection into the Y. M. H. A.'s lineup resulted in its suspension from the West Penn League, is awarded a position at forward and few who have seen him play consistently will dispute his right to the berth. For years an outstanding figure in independent basketball, Klateman this season was a tower of strength to the Bellefielders and easily the best forward playing in the district. A good floor man, an excellent teamworker and a fine shot, Klateman stood out in all victories scored by the Y. M. H. A. passers.

ANGELO STANDS OUT

At the other forward post is found Bobby Angelo, star of the Fintex quintet, first half champion of the Allegheny County League. Angelo played a remarkable game for the downtown passers throughout the season and was responsible in a large measure for the triumphs scored by Fintex in the first half of the County League race. Like Klateman, Angelo is a good floor man and an extraordinary shot from all sections of the floor. He and Klateman form an ideal pair of forwards.

Tommy O'Hara, of the Mieles, and Peck Minnick, of the Lafayettes, are the forwards on the second team; Gil Hunter, of the Schneiders, and Paul Zehfuss, of the Charleroi Merchants, are the forwards on the third team, while Montgomery, of the Schneiders, and Peffer, of Community House, represent the forwards on the fourth team.

Four star centers stood out in local independent basketball circles and this position was tougher to fill than any other on the first team. Slim Ransom, of the Schneiders; Sam Greenberg, of the Y. M. H. A.; Munk Ketchell, of Fintex, and Benny Baierl, of Community House, were the four that set the pace for the tipoff stars. There is little to choose between Ransom and Greenberg for the position on the first team and the former is awarded the berth by a slim margin.

Joe Gubby

Slim Ransom

Ransom, a tall, rangy performer who can out-jump the majority of his opponents, has been one of the mainsprings of the Schneider floor machine, West Penn League champion. His work all season has been of high order, one of the reasons for the excellent showing made by the North Siders. Greenberg was not far behind his Schneider rival as a center and is given the berth on the second team. The Bellefielder established himself as one of the most improved basketball players in the district this season and he is certain to be heard from in future years. Ketchell, of Fintex, is placed on the third team, and Baierl, of Community House, on the fourth team. Eddie Losman, Lafayettes; Ewalt, W. U. Hoyles, and Ski Twyman, Mieles, were the other centers who played well.

GUBBY TOPS GUARDS

One of the greatest of all independent stars for years has been Joe Gubby, stellar leader of the Duquesne Lafayettes, and once more this veteran is found holding down a guard position on the first team. Gubby is without an equal as a guard, his generalship and brilliant floor play being factors in the success attained by the Scarlet Hurricane. Without Gubby, the Lafayettes hardly would be the smooth-working floor machine that has led the County League procession for five straight years. Gubby stands out head and shoulders over all rivals.

Issy Clovsky, a youngster who has been coming to the fore with leaps and bounds, is the running mate for Gubby at guard. This boy earns his right to the position as a result of his excellent showing for the Y. M. H. A. quintet. A comparative newcomer in independent basketball insofar as actual experience is concerned, Clovsky's all-around play nevertheless has been one of the shining lights for the Bellefielders. Clovsky, judging from his work during the past two seasons, promises to enjoy an illustrous career before he hangs up his shoes.

Leisenring, Fintex; Andy Benedict, Lafayettes; Emerick, Schneiders; Sill Schrode, Knickers; Clark, Schneiders, and Hoffman, Mieles, were the other fine guards in local basketball this year. Hoffman plays equally as well at forward.

Kathleen Garnham Wins Golf Tourney

GREENSBORO, N. C., March 14.—(AP.)—Miss Kathleen Garnham, of the Naze Club, Liverpool, won the annual spring medal tournament at the Sedgefield Country Club today, adding a good 86, one over women's par, to her 89 of Friday for 175 and the title.

Miss Diana Fishwick, British champion, and Mrs. O. S. Hill, Kansas City, tied for second place honors, but Mrs. Hill shot a 43 on the extra nine holes and won the runner-up trophy when Miss Fishwick needed a 45. The second place battle was necessary when each of these stars scored 87 today to add to 90's Friday.

MICHIGAN CHAMP

ANN ARBOR, Mich., March 14.—(AP.)—University of Michigan won the Western Conference swimming championship tonight, with 57 points, far ahead of Iowa and Northwestern, which tied for second place with 20 points each.

PITT DEFEATS STATE, 37-32

STATE COLLEGE, Pa., March 14.—Doc Carlson's University of Pittsburgh quintet ran up a 15-point lead on Penn State in the first half and coasted through the second period to a 37-to-32 victory here tonight to end their 1930-31 season. The Panthers, led by Willie Kowallis and Co-Capt. Eddie Baker, dominated the play throughout the game. Although State outscored them by 10 points in the second half, the Panthers always were ahead by a comfortable margin. The half-time score was 23 to 8.

Lawry, W. Kowallis, Albright and Baker each rang the bell for a pair of field goals in the first half, with Lawry the scoring leader for the period by virtue of three foul goals. State was held to three field goals during the half, two of them made by Moser, Lion forward. The losers likewise missed several chances at the foul line, making good on only two out of nine tries.

State rallied in the second half and narrowed the gap in the score considerably, although failing to draw even with the Panthers at any time. Moser registered three from the field to snare the scoring honors for both teams with a total of 11 points, and Capt. Saltzman and Brand produced six points apiece to swell the Lions' total. The lineup:

| PENN STATE—32. | | PITT—37. |

The field has seats for 70,000. When the gates were closed more than 20,000 people were still outside. Despite a police cordon the crowd went through the fence in two places and many were trampled. Mounted police cleared the field, carried the injured out on stretchers and the game was played. West Bromwich won, 1 to 0.

HAGEN PACES FLORIDA FIELD

CORAL GABLES, Fla., March 14.—(AP.)—Walter Hagen, dean of golfing professionals, smashed his way to a course record and the lead of the field of 108 at the halfway point in the 36-hole Coral Gables-Miami Biltmore Open championship today.

The Haig's long-distance tee shots and deadly putting enabled him to chalk up a 68 for his 18-hole play, two strokes under the former Miami-Biltmore layout record and three strokes under par.

Tied for second position at the end of the 18 holes were Walter Kozack, Douglaston, L. I.; Billy Burke, Greenwich, Conn.; Tom Kerrigan, Siwanoy, New York; Al Espinosa, Chicago, and Densmore Shute, Columbus, O.; all with 72. Jim Dante, Madison, N. J., was a step behind with 73.

Hagen's birdie 3 on the ninth gave him a 34, one under regulation figures for the outgoing nine. His tee shot rolled close to a palm tree and he bent his club around a root in coming out, the ball rolling close to the pin. He sank it for a 3 as the gallery roared.

Art Lynch, Mamaroneck, N. Y., led the parade of the amateur players for the first half of the play with a 77. John De Forest, London, England, and Lee Chase, Buffalo, carded 82 each, for second place among the simon-pures. The scores:

MELLON HORSE WINS ABROAD

HURST PARK, Eng., March 14.—(AP.)—Alike, owned by the American, R. K. Mellon, won the four-mile handicap steeplechase from a fine field of Grand National candidates, which included six other American-owned horses.

Drin, one of the favorites for the classic, was second, and the American, M. D. Blair's Greatspan, was third.

Alike's margin was five lengths at the finish. His neat clearing of the hurdles and impressive running probably will cause a lowering of the odds against his chances in the Aintree classic.

Kozeluh Wins First Match From Tilden

LOS ANGELES, March 14.—(INS.)—Karel Kozeluh, foreign professional champion, after losing 10 straight matches to William T. Tilden, rallied today to defeat Tilden 4-6, 6-2, 3-6, 6-4, 6-1, for the first time during their present tennis barnstorming tour.

Hitters and Pitchers Dominate Baseball Alternately

JAMES J. LONG Sport Comment

Take Turns at Ruling.
Sluggers First Rage.
Hurlers Gain Mastery.
Change in Spirit Seen.
Picking Coaching Aides.

HISTORY OF DIAMOND RUNS IN CYCLES

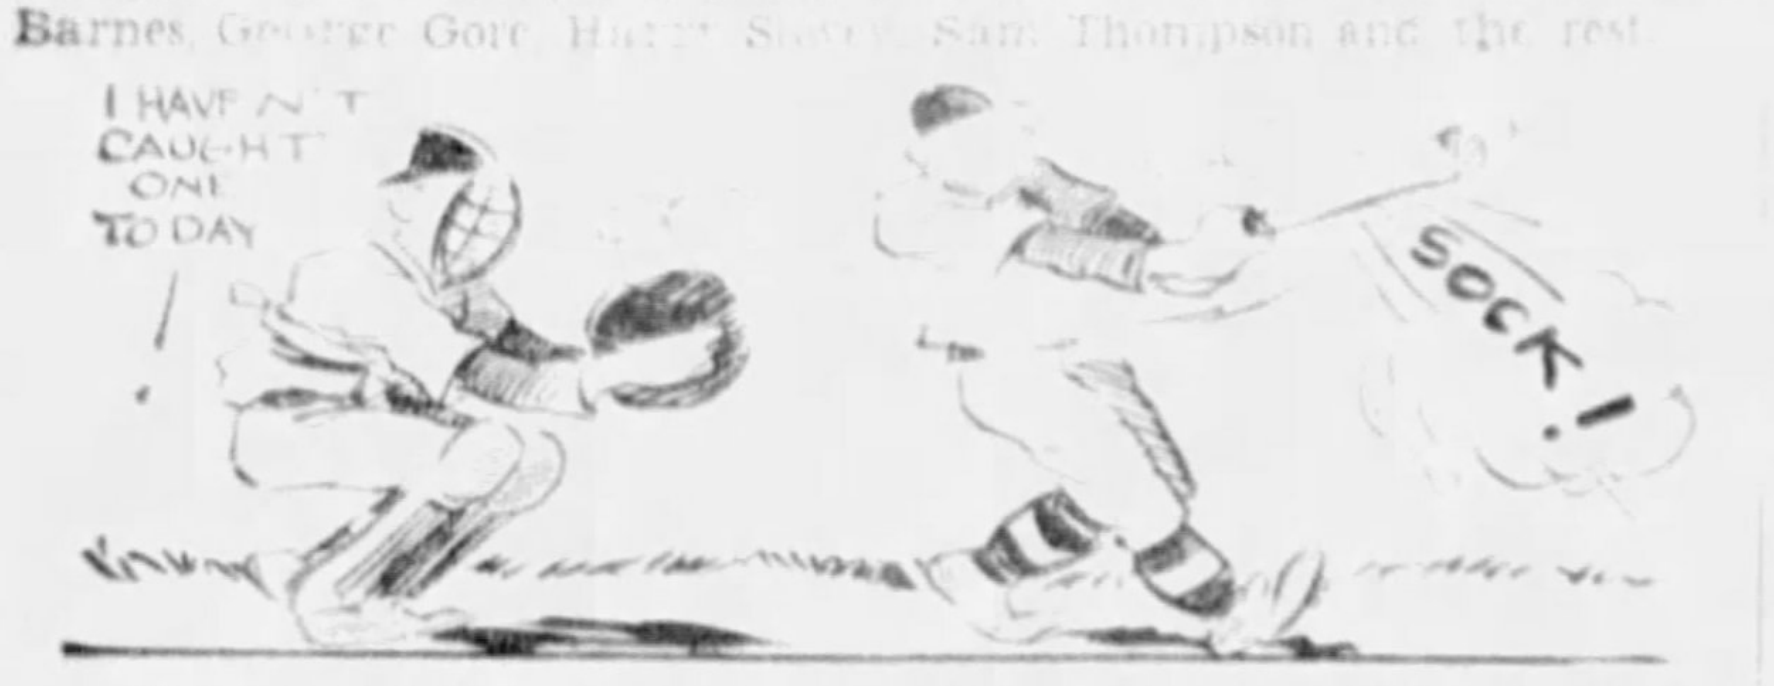
IT IS IN the natural and regular order of things that the dominating power and the consequent edge in prominence should now shift from the batter to the pitcher in baseball, as it is expected to do this year, following the introduction of a changed pellet.

For the slugger has had his day again, and once more it is the hurler's turn. First one and then the other has ruled the roost in the major leagues through the years. In that respect the history of the game appears to run in cycles, with the swatter and the twirler taking turns at being the outstanding figure in the major organization of the national pastime.

IN THE LONG ago it was the mighty hitter who captivated the imagination of the fans. There were Cap Anson, King Kelly, Dan Brouthers, Dave Orr, Buck Ewing, Pete Browning, Roger Connor, Ross Barnes, George Gore, Harry Stovey, Sam Thompson and the rest.



I HAVEN'T CAUGHT ONE TO DAY !
SOCK!

Then the pitchers began to gain the mastery, and their advantage continued to grow in spite of a series of changes made in the rules with the object of checking the advances that were threatening to put the batters under complete subjection.

THE SIZE OF the old pitcher's box was altered several times, the pitching distance was lengthened from 45 to 50 feet and then to 60½ feet, the batter was given first base when hit with a pitched ball and the number of balls required for a walk was cut gradually from nine to four.

The only step taken that helped the pitcher was the adoption of the foul-strike rule, yet the hurlers' grip tightened despite all the new handicaps until there came the day of the mighty pitchers—Christy Mathewson, Walter Johnson, Rube Waddell, Joe Wood, Jack Chesbro, Ed Walsh and others.

THAT ERA PASSED, too, with the help of the rule that banned freak deliveries and kept out any additional spitballers, and with the coming of the lively ball. Since that time the slugger has again dominated the game. Babe Ruth, Hack Wilson and other long-distance clouters of their type have featured the sport and have come in for the largest salaries. The hitters have been the drawing cards and the pitchers have had to be content with secondary roles.

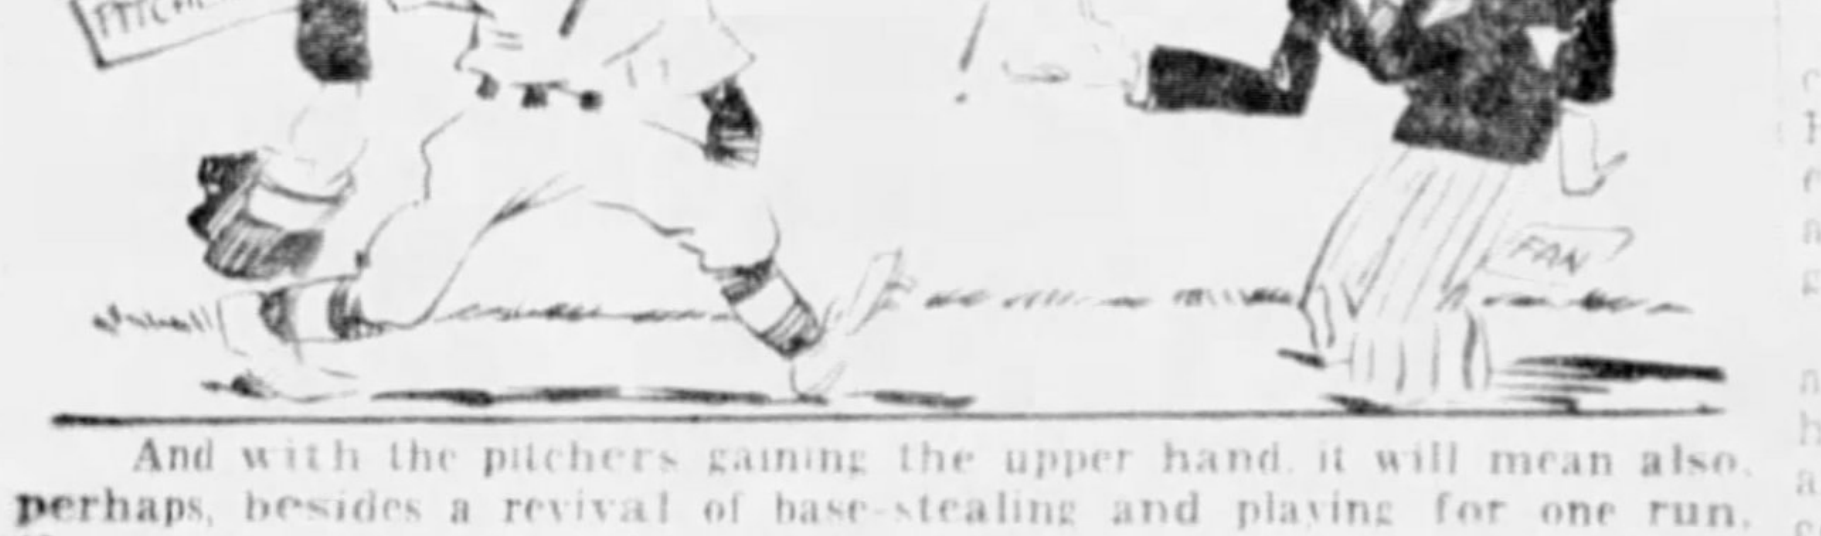
NOW THE PENDULUM swings once more to the pitchers, if the helpful effects of the new ball have not been overestimated. There is every prospect that the altered conditions will dim the glory of the star batsmen to some extent and again exalt the flingers.



PITCHERS
LOOKS LIKE YOUR TURN TO STAR !
FAN

And with the pitchers gaining the upper hand, it will mean also, perhaps, besides a revival of base-stealing and playing for one run, the return of some infielders and outfielders to the standards of defensive brilliance that were known in other days.

INFIELDERS AND OUTFIELDERS have not been so prominent for their defensive skill in recent years. With a jack rabbit ball shooting past them they have not been able to shine as in earlier years.

Rarely do you see more than one player of the present day picked on an all-time team. They haven't had the same chance as the old boys to look good on defense. The only exception generally picked is Ruth for an outfield position, and he gets the award mainly on his home-run prowess.

BUT IT WILL be different from now on, from all indications. With the pitching more effective and the batted balls slowed down, the infielders and outfielders can play in closer. They will be able to handle more grounders and flies, and the outfielders in particular will make more throws to the plate, a play that had been fading out more and more from season to season. The change won't hurt the game a bit. It is more apt to act like a tonic.

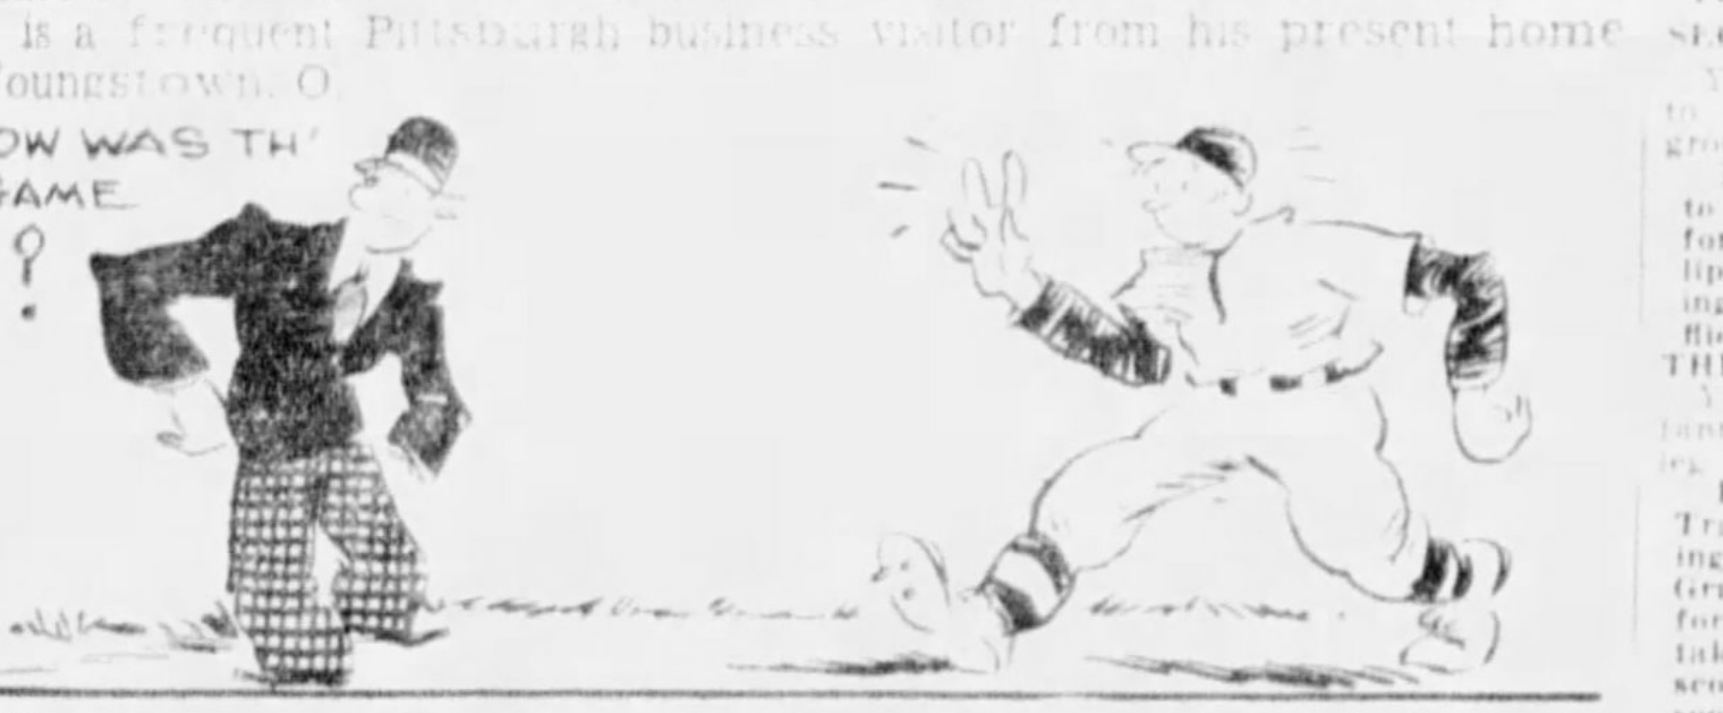
IT IS NOT only in the matter of inflated batting averages and farcically large scores that the hitting overemphasis in the major leagues in recent years has been noticeable. It has also had a far-reaching effect, and a harmful one, in another direction.

This effect has to do with the changed spirit of the players. For some time even before the coming of the lively ball, that spirit was sadly different from the spirit of the old-timers, but the lively ball has made matters worse.

THE CHANGE IS well illustrated by Billy Murray, a refreshing product of the old school, who managed the Phillies in 1907-8-9, and who is a frequent Pittsburgh business visitor from his present home in Youngstown, O.



HOW WAS TH' GAME ?

The veteran recalls that in the old days if you asked a ball player about the game of the afternoon the reply would be "We won, 3-2," joyfully, or "We lost, 4-3," with almost a moan.

"THAT WAS THE team spirit of the days when they fought for ball games," Billy commented. "But what do you hear now? Ask a modern player 'How was the game today?' and he holds up two fingers, meaning that he got two base hits. Not a word about his club or the score or how the game came out. The old batting average appears to be the only concern. It used to be that the team and the winning or the losing of the game were the only things in a player's mind. Now it's only himself and his basehits."

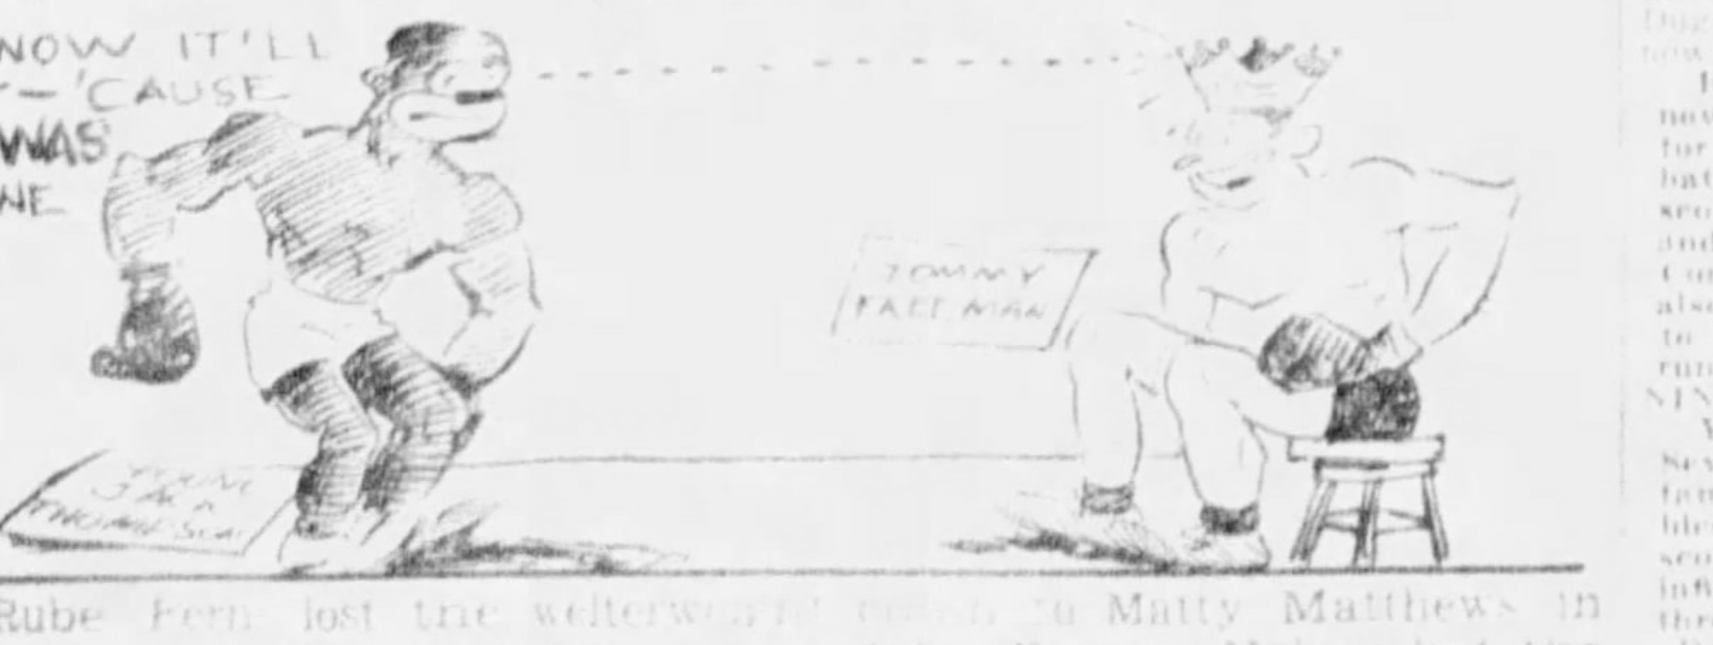
AMONG THE SENSIBLE suggestions in connection with the United States Olympic team for 1932 is one that the committee give its head coach full and complete power to select his own assistants, eliminating petty politics.

The committee has picked these assistants in the past and has not always named the best men to work harmoniously and successfully with the head coach. The latter is better qualified to make the appointments on worth and merit and naturally will be able to get better results with aides of his own choosing.

ASIDE FROM THE fact that he is clearly the superior fighter, there is plenty of precedent to support the opinion that Young Jack Thompson will regain the world welterweight title championship from Tommy Freeman when they meet at Cleveland on April 14. The Negro will not have tradition against him and will not be doing anything new by turning the table on the man who dethroned him. At lease five others have accomplished similar feats.



I KNOW IT'LL FIT—'CAUSE IT WAS MINE !
TOMMY FREEMAN

Rube Fern lost the welterweight crown to Matty Matthews in 1900 and snatched it back from him in 1901. Battling Nelson lost the lightweight title claimed by him to Joe Gans in 1906 and recovered it from the Negro in 1908. Stanley Ketchel dropped the middleweight laurels to Billy Papke in 1908 and regained them from Papke two months later. Jack Britton lost the welter diadem to Ted Lewis in 1917 but won it back from him in 1919, and Pete Herman relinquished the bantamweight honors to Joe Lynch in 1920 only to strip Lynch of them in 1921.

John J. Burke—Just a Versatile Sportsman—By Vern Swartsfager

J. J. Burke

John Jay Burke, city office manager for the Allegheny County Parks, and former member of the executive committee of the United States Golf Association public links section, best known in sportsdom as the father of public links golf in Pittsburgh, who not long ago challenged any man 50 years of age or more to four rounds of boxing, three sets of tennis, three games of tenpins, three games of duckpins, 100 points of balkline billiards, 50 points of three-cushion billiards and 36 holes of golf, the loser to forfeit $100, to be donated to charity, has won distinction in political, civic and athletic circles of which any man might well feel proud.

Actively interested in bicycling, boxing, bowling, auto racing, billiards, swimming, tennis and golf during his life, Burke has earned for himself an enviable reputation in sports.

For seven years Burke was a member of the executive committee of the public links section of the U. S. G. A. and is recognized as one of the outstanding figures of the country in this field. He has organized and directed practically every public links event in Pittsburgh during the past 10 years and has headed every movement undertaken in this city during that time to secure additional golfing facilities, has talked to virtually every organization in the city and to the City Council and broadcast over the radio and it is fitting that he today is in a position to represent the County Commissioners and Director of Parks Paul B. Riis in extending these exceptional facilities to a long-suffering army of public links golfers.

His versatility in athletics blends well with his remarkably interesting political and civic life. When only 16 years old, Burke attempted to follow Frank Lenz in a bicycle trip around the world. He went as far as Buffalo and gave up, a sadder but a wiser boy, while Lenz continued on his trip until he reached Afghanistan, where he was foully murdered.

Former Boxing Champion

At 17, Burke was the lightweight boxing champion of the police department. He did not suffer defeat until one day the late Roger O'Mara, according to his own testimony, "framed him" by sending him against Tom Sterck, a former prize fighter, who gave him "the works" for fair—a slightly displaced bone in his nose being a souvenir he carries to this day.

Shortly after his fall as a boxing champion, Burke took up bowling, his first games being confined to ninepins in the old Tivoli Alleys, in Diamond street, where Frank McCann held honors with 30 consecutive strikes. With his usual perseverance, Burke kept plugging away until he finally tallied 31 strikes in a row, a record that stands to this day.

Then he drifted in the natural course of things into tenpin bowling, and assisted in organizing the Allegheny County Bowling League. He formed the Schenley team, composed of well-known old-timers, such as Charley Trucks, later bowling champion in Philadelphia for 20 consecutive years, Miles McGrath, John Kalb, Henry Nichols, Harry Van Norman and himself.

The Brunswick-Balke All-Star team touring the country, lost its only game of a long, tough schedule to the Schenley outfit during a match here. Burke started this game with two nines and completed it with strikes to tie the score. In the roll-off, Schenley won, Capt. Burke's outfit barely tripping the brilliant team headed by the famous Kenna. The same local team won the county championship three times and always made a representative showing in national tournaments.

Billiardist and Auto Racer

Burke also was a splendid cue artist. He played in the three-cushion tourneys conducted by Harry Davis in the old Grand Parlors. His best record in this sport was to finish second in one of these events in which Fredericks, Pitcairn, Weston (not Cowboy), Seamen and several other stars participated. Fredericks won, but he lost one game—to Burke.

In the early days of electric cars, Burke became interested in automobile racing. It was at the Highland Park Speedway that he had his most notable experience in this line. Fifty cars had entered and every known expedient of the electrician had been resorted to to get maximum speed from the cars—and when the race was held, after the trials had been concluded, Burke, driving a Columbia Seabright, found himself in a tie with Bill Murray, in a Studebaker. To attain maximum speed in the final, Burke inserted a plug at a point he could not reach, and a boy was carried to the starting point for this purpose. The signal was given, but Burke was outdistanced by some 50 yards. Getting out of the car, he noticed the plug hanging by its side—the boy had failed him! And to make matters worse, when he went over to congratulate Murray, he discovered an extra battery in the front of the latter's car, rather poorly concealed.

Few men have been so active, few have accomplished so much, both for themselves and others, in athletics—and Jack Burke never need blush for his record on the golf course, so well known to the present generation, the tennis courts, the billiard and bowling surface or the boxing ring.

Burke was a charter member of the Pittsburgh Athletic Association, a charter member of the Automobile Club of Pittsburgh, a charter member of the present Pittsburgh Field Club, and always has been a promoter of sports and of good fellowship.

Political, Civic Leader

His political and civic life has been none the less interesting.

Burke was born in this state, and has been a resident of Pittsburgh almost all of his life. Starting as a cash boy, he soon sought more congenial work and became an office boy in a law office, acquiring the mastery of shorthand and later studying law under the late Kennedy T. Friend. Before he completed his studies, he was tendered and accepted the position of chief clerk in the newly-created Department of Public Safety here. At that time he was named secretary of the Johnstown Flood Commission and handled millions of dollars in contributions from all over the world, working with William R. Thompson, treasurer, and James B. Scott, chairman, in the old Chamber of Commerce Building.

Later he was selected along with his brother the Hon. James Francis Burke, as official reporter for the Republican National Convention at Minneapolis which nominated Benjamin Harrison for President, after which he went to New York to become secretary to the chairman of the Republican National Committee. Following Harrison's defeat, he was made secretary of the Republican National League of Clubs. He then managed the campaign of Richard C. McCormick for Congress in the First Congressional District of New York against Perry Belmont, who was handsomely defeated.

Active in War Work

While in New York, Burke was a member of the Amen Corner, the most famous newspapermen's organization in the world at the time, for it was there that the leading political lights of the country were to be found. The group was presided over by the late Eddie Riggs.

Four years in New York, and Burke returned to Pittsburgh to resume his law studies. He was named official reporter for the Republican National Convention at St. Louis, which, in 1896, nominated William McKinley for President, and was secretary of the famous Committee on Resolutions.

In 1898, when war was declared on Spain, Burke founded the Patriotic League, composed of hundreds of the most prominent Pittsburghers, including James S. McKean, John B. Jackson, H. C. Frick, Benjamin Thaw, and others of equal prominence. It provided funds to take care of dependents of soldiers from Allegheny County during the war. Burke served this cause during its life without pay.

He next was named secretary to Maj. A. M. Brown, Mayor of Pittsburgh, who was inducted into office under the title of City Recorder, a title which died with the induction of his successor, J. O. Brown, former Public Safety Director. The City Recorder's office was created by Pennsylvania legislation known as the Ripper act. While serving in this capacity, Burke attended the funeral of President McKinley as the official representative of the city of Pittsburgh.

Burke later was named executive secretary of the War Loan Organization of the Federal War Department, charged with the sale in this section of the state of $40,000,000 in war savings stamps. After visiting 19 counties, organizing civic, banking and commercial bodies into agencies, Burke reported the sale of $36,000,000 in stamps, one of the finest records in the country. In recognition of this work, Governor Fancher, of the Federal Reserve Bank, addressed a letter to Burke in which he said:

"You have been connected with the War Savings organization since its inception and have taken a prominent part in rendering splendid and patriotic service during the time when the movement was an important part of the government's general financial program. I desire to thank you and to express my personal appreciation for the very important part you have played in making the Thrift campaign the success which it has attained."

Thanked by Gen. Pershing

In connection with this campaign, Burke conceived an organization named in honor of Gen. Pershing, resulting in the formation of the Pershing Limit Club, the members of which purchased more than $8,000,000 in face value of War Savings Stamps. This club proved to be the most successful organization of its kind in the country and its work was considered the most notable financial achievement of the war in this section, and the members were so elated that, at their own expense, they had a handsomely bound volume printed and instructed Burke to present it to Gen. Pershing. In acknowledgement, Gen. Pershing wrote Burke as follows:

"An extended absence from the country accounts for this tardy acknowledgement of the very handsomely bound volume containing the names of all those who were enrolled in the Pershing Limit Club, which has been held here awaiting my return.

"I hope you will be good enough to convey to all concerned my deep appreciation of their courtesy in presenting to me this souvenir, and of the cordial sentiments which prompted its preparation. May I, too, express to the entire membership and to you my congratulations upon the splendid record made by this patriotic organization."

Having rendered exceptional service during the Spanish and World wars, Burke was called upon to serve in another department of the government—as cashier in the Internal Revenue office, which position he held seven years, during which time he handled almost $700,000,000 of government funds and also acted as secretary of the Association of Federal Executives of Western Pennsylvania.

Back to Sports Realm

He left the government service to accept the position of city office manager of the Allegheny County Parks, which position is especially congenial since it is closely associated with the recreational and outdoor life of the community. In this position, he has beheld the realization of his hopes and dreams in the opening to the public of two county golf courses.

And, lest we forget, Burke in recent times has interested himself in swimming—no, not as a swimmer, but as a judge and promoter—thereby keeping up his record for always being active in a sporting way.

GRIMES KNOCKS OUT STREET

BRADENTON, Fla., March 14.—(AP.)—With Frankie Frisch signed to a contract and Charley Gelbert well-advanced in his training, older members of the National League champions are already predicting that the Frisch-Gelbert-Keystone combination will equal or excel any similar pair of defense men before the end of the 1931 season.

Frisch affixed his name to a contract today after a conference with President Sam Breadon that lasted only eight minutes.

Burleigh Grimes was burning the ball into the glove of Manager Gabby Street today when one of the shots caromed off the edge of the plate to Street's forehead. Gabby heard the birdies twitter for some seconds and finally turned the glove over to Gus Mancuso. The injury was not serious.

Celtics Beat Union Switch

The Pittsburgh Celtics soccer team had little difficulty entering the second round of the Nied Cup play yesterday afternoon at the Westinghouse High School Stadium, defeating the Union Switch and Signal eleven, 3 to 1, on a muddy field. The play was slow because of the slippery footing.

The Celtics scored three times in the first half, Barrett getting two goals and Fleming one. In the second half, Brown scored for the Switch. Referee Lumsden had considerable trouble maintaining order in the second half, and three players were ejected from the game. The lineup:

| Pgh. Celtics—3. | | Union Switch 1. |

Soccer Foes Meet Today

This afternoon will see the playing of the first game of the series for the West Penn challenge cup, with Bridgeville and Dunlevy opposing each other.

The game will be played at the Bridgeville Speedway, and Pete McArdle will referee. The kick-off is scheduled for 3 p. m. Both clubs are members of the Keystone League.

The only other game this afternoon finds the Shannon Fintex team making the trip to Gallatin to meet the Monongahela champions in a benefit fray.

Next Sunday Gallatin is scheduled to make the trip to Paterson, N. J., to meet a team composed of former Pittsburghers, and the latter will return the visit to Gallatin on Easter Sunday.

BOBBY JONES' Lessons in Golf

By Robt T Jones Jr.

American Open, British Open, American Amateur and British Amateur Champion.

Bobby Jones

The man has not yet lived who could explain the vagaries of the game of golf; who could tell why it is that one player's game can vary so much from day to day and from year to year. And this variation goes far beyond anything that is reflected by the score card. The simple fact that a 69 may be followed by a 79 is easily explained by saying that on one day the player was right and on the other he was off. But the queer part of it comes when we see a man compile on successive days two very nearly equal scores, yet make them with golf that is entirely different.

We usually assign certain excellencies to certain players; one is good with the irons, another with the woods, and still another around the greens. That is, normally. But there are times when the fine iron player obtains a good total by fine putting after missing all the greens with his second shots, and the fine putter plays perfect golf up to the greens and never holes a putt. In tournament play, it is a common thing to see this transition take place overnight.

The whole thing, or very nearly all of it, must be accounted for in the mental side of the game. I suppose, for it is inconceivable that an expert player could lose his skill with any club so quickly. There are just days when one loses confidence in a certain club for no particular reason.

Hagen Troubled

Carried over a longer period of time, if all reports can be believed, this same thing has been happening to Walter Hagen. During all of last year, and during so much of the present season as has already passed along, Walter Hagen, one of the greatest putters the world has ever seen, has been annexed to a putting slump which has knocked him over in every tournament in which he has played. All the experts agree that Hagen during this same period has played the best golf of his career up to the greens. His iron play and his driving have been far more accurate than in the old days when he was winning tournaments at almost every start. Yet the old putter that used to rap them in from all angles refuses to respond even well enough to keep the old Haig seriously in the running.

Apparently what happened on the ninth green in the third round at Interlachen last July is a fair sample of what Walter has been going through. Hagen started this third round two strokes behind me and he came to the ninth hole with a putt of less than two yards to be out in 36. I had already passed the turn in 33, so that if Walter had holed his putt his situation would not have been hopeless, with 27 more holes to play. But he stabbed the first putt, ran past nearly two feet, missed the next, and barely scrambled the third one into the side of the hole. And that, according to the pros and the writers who have been following the winter trek, is the way Hagen has been putting ever since.

Tells of Taylor

Now, all this is interesting, I think, but I don't want to leave the impression that there is any disposition on my part to indicate that Walter Hagen has irrevocably lost his putting touch. I think I know how the old Haig feels about it himself, and I ask his forgiveness for saying anything about it. Sometimes, when you are struggling with a thing of this kind, you get to the point that you would prefer not to hear it mentioned.

But I would ask Walter to remember what happened to J. H. Taylor, the greatest master of the mashie who ever lived. For one solid year old J. H. was beset by a fit of shanking which almost caused him to give up golf. Once his best club, this mashie became absolutely incorrigible, and its owner was in despair. At last, the thing left as suddenly as it had come, and Taylor became again as good, if not better, than he was before.

And so it is likely to be with Hagen's putter. To a lot of us it is inconceivable that a master putter like Hagen could lose irretrievably a touch that for years has been one of the best in the game. If I were in Walter's shoes I should rather look toward the future with a considerable amount of assurance. Hagen was always a better golfer up to the greens than most people gave him credit for being, his putting so far overshadowed the rest of his play. Now the old order has changed and no doubt his putting is thought to be worse than it really is because the rest of his game has improved.

All I can say is that if his long game has improved as much as they say it has, when he gets back the old putting touch, he will take a good many of the young sprouts for a fast ride.

Harry (Sonny) Guest, of the KoKoMo Kids, of East Pittsburgh, who set a new all-events record in the Tri-state Tenpin Tournament last year with a total of 1,872 pins, retained his laurels in the twenty-fourth annual renewal of the competition concluded last night on the Forward alleys, Squirrel Hill. ## PITT AND TECH BOXERS LOSE

The University of Pittsburgh and Carnegie Tech varsity boxing teams both went down to defeat in their matches last night.

Pitt bowed to Duquesne University, 4 matches to 3, in a meet in the Duquesne gym, which marked the debut of the Bluffites in the sport, while Carnegie Tech lost to W. & J.'s intra-mural champions, 5 to 2.

Close to 1,000 persons witnessed the Pitt-Duquesne struggle, while almost twice that many sat in on the Tech match in the Tartans' gym.

The big feature of the Tech meet was the defeat of Capt. Alex Ducanis, of Carnegie, by Demedowitz, in the 175-pound class. It was the first decision Ducanis had lost this season.

Coach Sesto, Plaid mentor, instead of using his entire varsity lineup, depended upon four freshmen, sending in only Restaine, Ducanis and Pouncey of his first stringers. The Plebes, however, scored Carnegie's only wins, Atlas getting the decision over Jennings in the 125-pound class and Burke easily outpointing Kistler in the 165-pound class.

There were two knockouts, both of the technical variety, and both were by W. & J. boxers. Restaine and Morrisey were going along smoothly in the 135-pound class until the former suffered a cut over his right eye, and Referee Simendinger stopped the bout.

Kummer, of Tech, tired in his bout with Gardner and it was stopped after 45 seconds of the third round.

Pitt also used a changed lineup against the Dukes. A surprise was the technical knockout of Joe Tommins, of Pitt, by Carl Abington, in the third round. The only other knockout also went to Duquesne. The summaries:

DUQUESNE vs. PITT

125-pound class—F. Bernaccini, Duquesne, and Milton Bradley, Pitt, drew.

175-pound class—Carl Abington, Duquesne, won by a technical knockout over Joe Tommins, Pitt, 3 rounds.

Referee—Red Robinson.

W. & J. vs. CARNEGIE TECH

THREE BOXING SHOWS CARDED IN DISTRICT

Brannon-Anderson Meet Again at Motor Square Garden Tomorrow Night.

Belmont Battles Alger at McKeesport; Walters, Pals Silvers at Moose.

Three boxing shows in the Pittsburgh district and others in the Western Pennsylvania sector make up the fighting program for the fans this week.

Motor Square Garden starts the ball rolling tomorrow night, when it presents Eddie Anderson, the Wyoming Cowboy lightweight, and Eddie Brannon, local Negro, in a return bout as its windup offering. Anderson won a decision over Brannon in the East End arena a month ago in a battle that was so full of action that it called for a repeat.

At McKeesport, on Thursday night, Jimmy Belmont, Frank Klaus' greatly improved welterweight, of Braddock, takes on Billy Alger, of Phoenix, Ariz., and Reading, Pa., subbing for Tiger Joe Randall, local hard-hitting Negro, who has a bad hand, and at the Moose Temple, on Friday night, Jocko Walters, Springfield (O.) Negro middleweight, who has scored two quick knockouts there, will be tested against Pal Silvers, New York veteran, who suffered a technical knockout defeat by Paul Pirrone in a bout at the Garden not long ago, when he subbed on short notice. Belmont won over Joe Trippe in his most recent start, at McKeesport, drawing the first good gate of the season there, while Alger will be remembered as the veteran who boxed Joe Dundee, then welterweight champion, at the Meyers Bowl, summer before last.

GERSHE IN SEMI-FINAL

Backing up the Anderson-Brannon setto tomorrow night is an eight-round semi-final introducing to the local fans Benny Gershe, Cleveland southpaw featherweight socker, who is in the throes of a comeback campaign. He meets Joe Marciente, of New York, another newcomer here.

Eddie Kaufman, of Cleveland, boxes Hary Fine, of the Hill, in the second bout, and Jimmy Reilly, of McKeesport, and Peaches Gallagher, of Swissvale, are in the opener.

Ed Fritz's Castle Bowl at New Castle, also operates again tomorrow night, with Emmett Rocco, Ellwood City heavyweight, boxing Joe Sekyra, Dayton (O.) veteran, in the main bout. On the same night, Joe Trippe meets Ted Yarosz at Oil City.

Tuesday night sees Young Rudy, Charleroi welterweight, boxing Jimmy Moinette at Alliance, O., with Frankie Porto, of Glassport, in the semi-final against Steve Selina.

The Pitt varsity boxers are booked for two meets during the week, the first the postponed engagement against West Virginia University at Morgantown, W. Va., on Wednesday and the second with W. & J. at the Stadium on Saturday. Carnegie Tech's team battles Bucknell at Lewisburg, Pa., on Saturday. Meanwhile the Intercollegiate championships are slated at State College on Friday and Saturday.

An amateur boxing show is billed for Croatian Hall, Duquesne, Monday night, and, on Friday, an intercity amateur show is carded at the Keystone A. C., with a team from the Al Sands Club, of Uniontown, opposing one from the Robins A. C., of Cleveland.

A charity amateur boxing show under the auspices of the Sto-Rox Emergency Welfare Association will be held in the gymnasium of the Miles Bryan High School in McKees Rocks, Tuesday night. Proceeds will go to the unemployed of McKees Rocks and Stowe Township. Seven bouts are planned.

Motor Square Garden is trying to reschedule the third Jackie Rodgers-Johnny Datto bout for March 30 . . . They first met in the East End arena last New Year's night, with Datto flooring Jackie four times in the second round and winning the decision in 10 rounds . . . The second clash occurred on February 9, with Datto being floored three times in the first four rounds, twice for counts of nine. . . . They were rematched for last Monday night, but Rodgers canceled because of an injured side, as a result of which he is suspended until he is able to box again, and then he will have to undergo an examination by the boxing commission physician before he is pronounced fit and reinstated. He has posted a $500 forfeit to go through with the match this time.

Three champions will defend their titles in the Intercollegiate boxing championships scheduled at State College, Pa., next Friday and Saturday. . . They are Dave Stoop, Penn State 115-pounder; Douglas Crosby, Western Maryland 135-pounder, and Norman Hall, Navy 145-pounder. . . Leo Houck, Penn State coach, and George Decker, Pennsylvania coach, who will pilot their teams in the tournament, once met in the ring as professionals. . . Joe Moran, Syracuse football star, who has won all 11 of his bouts this season by knockouts, may be called upon to meet Steese Brubaker, of Western Maryland, who also is undefeated in the middleweight class. . . Rocky Kansas, former lightweight champion, is reputed to be one of the richest of the retired boxers, his fortune being estimated at around $300,000, much of it being invested in apartment houses in Buffalo, his home city . . . Eddie Anderson, the lightweight, who boxes Eddie Brannon again at Motor Square Garden tomorrow night, has been considerably embarrassed recently by the fact that another Eddie Anderson, a heavyweight, of Baltimore, has been getting knocked out regularly and promoters around the country keep getting the pair confused. . . The smaller Eddie is taking steps to force the Baltimorean to change his ring name.

Sandlot Circuits Formed

LOCAL LEAGUES READY TO WORK ON '31 CARDS

Amateur Nines From All Sections Enroll in National Elimination Series.

Honus Wagner Continues to Form District Loops; Banner Season Predicted.

By TOM BIRKS

With reorganization work going along at a merry clip, sandlot baseball apparently is in for a banner season. Practically all of the leading leagues in the district had meetings during the past week, and with the West Penn, City and Commercial and Industrial loops showing stronger clubs, little remains to be done before the openers aside from the schedule committees' work.

The West Penn League is the strongest sandlot baseball loop ever organized outside the city limits, and the City circuit with practically all of its leaders of last season back, appears to be in for a record year.

TEAMS JOIN WAGNER

Since Honus Wagner was named regional director for the Western Pennsylvania, Eastern Ohio and West Virginia sections of the newly-formed United States Amateur Baseball Association, the old National League veteran has been swamped with teams entering under the Wagner banner.

Leslie Mann, former big leaguer and national director of the body, is scheduled to appear in Pittsburgh next week, and the organization of many other sandlot loops is assured.

Since Wagner announced the invitation series, all of the leading amateur clubs in the district such as the Homestead Aces, Duquesne Traders, New Eagle Indians, Monessen Steelers, Swissvale Community, Turtle Creek Community Builders, Linwood, Reliance Life, Beckman Motors and McKeesport Sterlings, are enthused over the tourney in which they will participate.

During the past week a score of leagues were planned by Wagner and should be perfected within a couple of weeks. The Monessen City loop, with six clubs, including the Monessen Firemen and the leading teams in the district, got under way.

VALLEY LOOP SET

On the other side of the river, Floyd France, who has been named commissioner for the newly-formed body by Wagner, organized the Monongahela Valley loop, under the presidency of Mayor Stahlmann, of Monongahela. In this loop are the famous New Eagle Indians, who have played a prominent part in all the eliminations in Western Pennsylvania over a number of years, and again this season will be under the managerial wing of Hooks Montana.

In the Monongahela loop are Riverview, Van Voorhis, Bunola, Fellsburg, Charleroi, Finleyville, Monongahela and Donora.

President Dick Mackey, of Carnegie Steel, and A. H. Burchfield, Jr., of the Joseph Horne's, flashed into the limelight during the week by organizing the finest Commercial and Industrial loop in its history.

With Reliance Life, B. & O., Carnegie Steel, Reick-McJunkins, Pittsburgh Coal and Joseph Horne's entered, there is more than a possibility of the loop being enlarged to eight teams with P. & L. E. and Duquesne Light as the newcomers. Hermann Strahl and Kempton McNutt were two of the original organizers of the C. & I.

The Steel City League is going over with a bang. Many old favorites, including Demor, Brodericks, East End Cardinals, Shine A. C., Fox, Star Circle, St. Elizabeths and the Doelfels will be back on the sandlots fighting for the trophies.

OHIO VALLEY MEETING

Tomorrow at Sewickley Wagner is going to organize an Ohio Valley section of the Minor League. P. J. Cauls, Bellevue, Coraopolis, St. Joseph's, Avalon Rangers and Neville Independents are invited to this session.

On Wednesday the Minor League City section will convene at Wagner's to close the roster.

The City League, under the presidency of Harry Yerx, had a successful meeting last Wednesday. With Book Shoe, Dormont, Homewood, Pleasant Valley, North Side Civics and the J. L. Thomas nine of last season's loop back, it is very apparent that the class of baseball on tap will be just as good as last year, when the league had a successful season.

Two new clubs will be invited to sit in at the next session to make the league an eight-team circuit.

With the Central League getting under the wire, Wagner will have completed the City loops. Beckman Motors, I. K. S., St. Joachim's, Lawrenceville, Wally Smith club and the inclusion of a newly-formed club with good backing, will be in the makeup of this league.

Zehfuss to Coach Pitt Frosh Five

Paul Zehfuss, for three years a regular on the University of Pittsburgh varsity basketball squad, has been appointed freshman coach for next year, succeeding George Kowallis.

Zehfuss, who was a teammate of Charley Hyatt, Les Cohen and other Pitt luminaries, played in the Allegheny County League as a member of the Charleroi Merchants during the past season.

Footman's Board Easily Made

Today's lesson for Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph Chapter members in the Fisher Body Craftsman's Guild has to do with a detail which accounted for much of the pomp and splendor so characteristic of the coaches of the nobility. That detail is the footman's board, which is mounted across the rear axle. Construction of this unit and its related parts will bring the model in the great $50,000 competition very near to completion.

Upon the footman's board stood the servants and bodyguard of the master. Besides lending an air of formality and dignity, these retainers opened the coach doors, arranged the folding steps, and attended generally to the needs of the occupants of the coach. In the earlier days it was customary to carry a cook, not only because the inns along the route were not always prepared to provide meals, but also because persons of any importance had to take precaution constantly against poisoned food.

When baggage had to be carried, as on long trips, it also occupied the footman's board, and the footmen rode on top of the baggage. No doubt the trunk racks and luggage containers mounted on the rear of modern cars are an outgrowth of this custom. And now for the lesson itself:

Footman's Board

The footman's board is very easily made. A piece of 5-32x3⅛x3 15-16 inches wood is cut to the outline given on the Guild drawings. The edge has a rope molding. This may be put on by one of the two methods suggested in illustration 23 of today's lesson.

174—Sketch A illustrates the rope molding as cut and filed into the edge of the board itself. If this method is used, first cut a recess on both sides of the edge of the board, leaving the central portion for the molding.

175—Refer to your Guild lesson No. 15 for the method of laying out and making the molding itself.

Boys, how would you like to win a $5,000 scholarship to college? Or a trip to Detroit with all expenses paid? Or one of more than 900 other prizes totaling $50,000 in value?

This opportunity is offered you through the Sun-Telegraph Chapter of the Fisher Body Craftsman's Guild. All you have to do is build a model of the famous Napoleonic coronation coach. The best coaches will be awarded the prizes. Simply enroll at your nearest General Motors dealer. You will be mailed plans and instructions telling how to build the coach. The contest is open until June 1, 1931. Everything's free.

176—In sketch B twisted wire is used for the molding. Cut or file a small groove in the end of the board to receive the wire. Allow the molding to project beyond the edge slightly more than one-half its own diameter.

177—The wire molding is held in place in this groove by small pins driven into the wood and soldered to the wire in several places.

178—These same methods may be used for making the molding around the edge of the toe board.

Toe Board Pillars

179—The toe board pillars may be cut from one solid piece of stock and the design carved as indicated on drawings.

180—Another method would be first to cut the main portion of the pillar to correct shape. A piece of cardboard or thin wood should then be glued to center to produce the raised effect of this part of the pillar.

Board Retainer Arms

181—The retainer arms may be cast in metal from a pattern or they may be cut out of a piece of wood as indicated in today's illustration. The patterns are full size as given on the Guild drawings.

182—After the arm blanks have been cut from the stock, round the corners with a file and sandpaper.

183—The decorations at the ends may be carved or the surfaces may be left flat and the scrolls cut out of cardboard. These are then glued in place. The same method may be used in making the leaf design at the center.

184—The arms are fastened to the board with a thin ⅜" flat head wood screw, the head of screw being underneath the board out of sight.

185—The board is fastened to the carriage by means of the two footman's board angle brackets illustrated on Guild drawings. One end of the bracket is fastened underneath the rear spring assembly, the board being fastened to the other end.

WE NOW PRESENT

by DARRELL V. MARTIN
RADIO EDITOR

Bow-wow Blues

IT MAY SOUND absurd, but it's a fact that an animal has a better chance of broadcasting over KDKA than a child. Less than a handful of persons under 16 have "made the grade" in a special audition prescribed for children.

Darrell V. Martin

Offhand, we can name only Jackie Coogan and Baby Rose Marie. On the other hand, we can name a dog (no, three dogs), a lion, a seal, a dozen chick peeps and even a cuckoo (Raymond Knight) that have been permitted on the air without audition. The lion was "educated"—he let out a roar when the trainer twisted his mane. One of the dogs was just as playful. When it came time for him to bark he sulked in a corner of the studio. Lou Kaufman switched off the microphone and growled to aggravate the animal. The canine took him seriously, backed up on his haunches and prepared for a friendly combat. The program was continued from an adjoining studio.

Hey, Ripley!

W. K., OF BROOKLINE, tells a funny story. He was motoring through Berlin, Pa., not long ago at dusk and noticed that all the street lights were out. Stopping at a garage, he inquired about the situation and was told that the lights would stay out until 7:15, when Andrew H. Brown, of the "Fresh Air Taxicab Company, Incorpulated," left the witness stand. A power leakage had shut off all electric current in the houses, making radios useless. Borough heads convened hastily to determine how they could remedy the situation in time for Amos 'n' Andy that night. One of them hit on a brilliant idea—the street light circuit was snapped and the power diverted into the homes. When Bill Hay concluded his remarks, traffic lights gleamed once again and folks in Berlin went about their evening chores by candlelight.

What They Say:

Bert Digby, Butler: Let's start a campaign to put "Sisters of the Skillet" on at night.

C. D. H., Windber, Pa.: The girl that does the giggling in KDKA's Barn Dance should laugh natural. She is spoiling the program.

Mrs. E. K., 184 St. Joseph street: Congratulations on your programs with Raymond Knight. Who's the Cuckoo-er?

T. E. Semko, Jacobs Creek, Pa.: I know all the signature songs on the air. Call me if you ever need help. You're right about Ben Bernie!

J. F. B., Dalzell place: So I was right, thanx. Now how about having Frank Newton of WMBJ sing over KDKA some time?

Mrs. W. H.: You mentioned all Dave Rubinoff's brothers last Sunday but you failed to mention his sister, Mrs. Rose William Buchanan, of Blairsville, Pa.

Postoffice Boys, Homestead: Will you please confine Ford Miller to singing "Lonesome Road?"

F. R. P., Sisterville, W. Va.: Here's my pick of the ether: Sunday—Arabesue; Monday, 10:30 p. m., Dixie Spiritual Singers on WRVA; Tuesday, 10 p. m., Cotton Queene Show Boat on WLW; Thursday, 9:30, Detective Drama; Monday, 7:15 p. m., Mr. and Mrs. Kane on WJZ. Amos 'n' Andy, Lowell Thomas, Floyd Gibbons.

Studio Lights

"Doc" Rockwell, Q. Q. Q. (Quack Quack Quack), entertains the WLW audience at 11 tonight.

Mike McDermott, county sleuth, tunes Tom Noonon every Sunday.

Leatrice Joy sings "Blue Again" and "The Lilac Tree" on KDKA Friday at 8.

O. W. Cook, of 56 Bridge street, wants a permit to erect a 30-watt station on 1320 kilocycles for daytime only. Hearing in May.

We've watched "Dutch" Eyth smash the line, and now we're to hear him cuddle the mike (KQV tomorrow, 8:15).

Irving Spector, first violinist for Vincent Lopez, gives a special concert on WTIC at 10:47 tonight.

It cost a Portland (Ore.), political speaker, six months in jail and $500 fine for six profane words over the radio last week.

George Seibel, Marjory Stewart, May Beegle and Harvey Gaul are booked for the Congress of Women's Club radio programs in April.

Phyllis Morton has an adept cast in her "Thimble Theater" group on KQV at 5:45.

DX Stunt: Try ZETF, Vera Cruz, Mexico, 685 kilocycles, between 8 p. m. tonight and 1 a. m. Monday.

And that's all, friends, until tomorrow!

British Scheme Small Fee for Viewing Studio

Fans Must Pay to See Artists Perform in New BBC Plant

By MARTIN CODEL
Special Correspondent.

Some apprehension is being felt by theater interests in England because the British Broadcasting Corporation has applied for a music and dancing license for the super-studio being erected in its new broadcasting house.

The studio will seat an audience of 1,000, and it is feared that box-office receipts will soon be added to the receiving set tax. The government now collects an annual tax of $2.50 on ever radio receiving set used in the British Isles.

They are even beginning to charge newspaper and periodicals in England for the use of photographs supplied by the BBC, which also publishes a widely circulated magazine of its own called the Listener.

Public versus private enterprise is by no means a settled problem in England, though some Americans like to point to the British system as the ideal for this country. Aside from the British theater men's fear of a radio-theater competitor, the suggestion that the BBC may charge admission to radio studios brings up a natural question whether admissions will be charged in the studios with large seating capacities being planned in the "Radio City" project in New York City.

McCormack Sings From West Coast

John McCormack, world famous Irish tenor, will bring a new high peak to St. Patrick's Day music when he sings the modern world premier of a newly discovered ancient Irish folk song during the 9 o'clock program on KDKA Wednesday.

The entire program will come from KFI, an NBC associated station in Los Angeles. A string trio will play the signature song from Los Angeles also.

CLEVER COMEDY TEAM

Blaine H. Moke          Thomas W. Riggs

FANS ARE talking about the team of "Riggs and Moke" on WCAE. These two Ohio State boys have captured the fancy of local listeners and some rate them on a par with "Sisters of the Skillet." Hear them Wednesday night at 11 o'clock and Saturday afternoon at 3:15.

Cosgrave to Speak Today

William Cosgrave, president of the executive committee of the Irish Free State Parliament, will face a microphone in Dublin this afternoon. His words will be relayed by short wave across the Atlantic, and National Broadcasting Company engineers will add the Emerald Isle to the list of European countries with which they have inaugurated international radio exchange.

The words of the Irish leader will be distributed over nationwide NBC networks in America at 1:30 p. m. He is expected to speak on the economic development of Ireland, international peace, the Eucharistic Congress of 1932, and the Chicago World's Fair of 1933. He will be introduced by Frederick A. Sterling, American minister.

Famous Trial Opens Tonight

When Clarence Darrow and James M. Beck join issue before the microphone tonight in the modern version of the trial of Benedict Arnold for treason, the radio public will hear two of the ablest lawyers in the United States.

The trial of Arnold will be in two episodes and will inaugurate a series of "Famous Trials of History" over WCAE at 10:15.

The conclusion of the Benedict Arnold trial will take place next Sunday. A distinguished jury, composed of United States Senators and Representatives and other prominent persons, will render its verdict at the end of the second episode.

Yost Wielding 'Big Stick' on Radio Bad Boys

KTNT at Muscatine, Iowa, Latest Station to Draw Examiner's Fire.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 14.—Another of radio's so-called "bad boys" will soon be off the air, if the Federal Radio Commission accepts and the court upholds the recommendations of Chief Examiner Ellis A. Yost. KTNT, Muscatine, Ia., owned by Norman T. Baker and operated as an adjunct of various other enterprises, is the latest station to come under Yost's ax.

Yost points out that KTNT's owner is engaged in a number of commodity selling enterprises for which the station is the advertising medium. The American Medical Association, having disagreed with Baker's theories and practices, became "the subject of venomous broadcast attacks by Baker," according to Yost.

Yost cincludes the station's license should be refused because:

1—A broadcasting license imposes an inescapable obligation to serve public interest.

2—It is not in public interest for a radio station to provoke personal and community strife and turmoil.

3—A licensee should not unjustly attack legitimate organizations or individuals to further his own interests and business.

4—A station may have much to commend it and yet sufficient objectionable matter to discredit it.

5—It is not necessary to violate any penal provision of the radio act to forfeit right to renewal of license.

Baker has until March 20 to file exceptions to Yost's report, after which the commission must act upon it. If Yost is sustained by the commission, the Iowa broadcaster may appeal to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, the same tribunal which sustained the commission in the Brinkley case.

Pittsburgh Gives 'Roxy' Farewell

Roxy and His Gang complete their theatrical tour at Pittsburgh on March 23, after which Roxy will immediately assume his duties as "major domo" of Radio City. Although the radio center in New York City is not scheduled for completion until 1934, Roxy, according to his radio colleagues, will have "plenty to keep him busy."

SISTERS

A VOTE for the solid South — Helvetia, Connie and Martha — the Boswell Sisters heard every Sunday on KDKA at 10:15 p. m.

GRAHAM McNAMEE SPEAKING:

ONE OF OUR newest radio announcers is vitally interested in the "For Sale" sign on a 360-acre ranch in Southern Colorado. He probably won't be able to marry the young lady back west, who already said "yes," until it's sold. The darn thing has been a white elephant on his hands since he inherited it. The announcer is Ezra McIntosh, recently arrived in New York with a reputation as former mikeman at WOW, in Omaha. At present he's announcing only daytime programs, but probably will be heard in evening presentations soon.

Mr. McNamee.

Since 1890, three bachelor uncles of his lived on the isolated ranch in Pagosa Springs, Col. For 40 years no woman ever stepped foot over the boundary lines of the 360-acre tract, which is located in the Catalan sheep country. Young McIntosh used to visit his uncles there during summer vacations from college.

Then, in 1930, the last of the three uncles died, and McIntosh inherited the property. That was when he learned aout taxes. First the inheritance tax, then the regular, annual obligations. It used up more than half his salary, and his income was cut in two with the land lying idle.

So the "For Sale" sign went up. It's still there. Meantime he's come on to New York, looking to larger network broadcasts to provide him with the opportunity for making up the deficit.

THE LOUDSPEAKER -:- By LOUIS REID

Great Sport Season

NEW YORK, March 14.—Never has the arena held a more potent lure for the listener. The broadcasters, their eyes already fixed on the calendar, are missing no opportunity to make the coming spring and summer the greatest sports season in radio history. Next to the broadcasting of music the description of sports events is regarded by the radio titans as their leading and most fascinating function. They are aware that when the ballyhoo is blowing well, as it always did when Tex of the Rickards was its chief dispenser, there is a vast and eager public for heavyweight championships. They know that nothing this side of Valhalla so fans the sale of radio sets, so consistently whips up the excitement of the public as a heavyweight fight.

Louis Reid

Rickard Helped

The radio men have good reason to mourn the loss of Tex. Great showman that he was, he knew that radio offered no real menace to the turnstiles, provided the bout had a hint of the spectacular about it and the publicity river was overflowing, as he hoped, the levees of the sports writers. He was ever ready with a glad hand to the microphone men. He helped them when help was needed, when broadcasting was wanting some tremendous sports spectacle to make the people of the republic radio-minded in a big way.

Tex paved the way for radio's glorification of sports. The broadcasters have not allowed the tradition to die. They are more alert at present to sports than to any other phase of American life. Today they are busy with plans for the coming season, and while they will not have anything comparable to a Dempsey-Firpo or Dempsey-Tunney fight — because they have not the dramatic personality of Dempsey to reckon with —they hope to do right by the armchairs when Schmeling meets Stribling.

There will be other events to capture for the eardrums—the runaways of Gallant Fox or his successor; of Babe Ruth's opening labors, of the heart-straining oar-pulling at Poughkeepsie, of the open golf championship and who knows, perhaps, an open tennis championship. There will be bouts in profusion, including undoubtedly the pawings and tramplings of the human Himalaya, Carnera.

Steamboat Racing

And the broadcasters, you may be sure, will not be satisfied with so-called major sports events. The competitive urge is strong with them. Network rivalry keeps them on edge. And so you will find them delving into the picturesque contests of the days when farmers were as contented as their cows and Hoover was staking out mines in the open spaces of the Orient.

You will find them, if our tea leaves are as reliable as ever,' resurrecting quoit pitching, river steamboat racing. They may even go to such lengths as they did last summer when they actually broadcast a description of a pillow fight.

Victor Herbert's melody, "Kiss Me Again," takes on in the voice of Rosa Ponselle a lusciousness, that to our ears, it has never known before. Miss Ponselle's soprano is the best that has yet been disclosed on the air. It seems a pity, however, that her program be interrupted by commercial plugging. Much of the spell of the Ponselleon voice is lost when even before the notes die away ballyhoo boys crowd to the microphone with their sales talk. Ponselle and her operatic colleagues in this new radio series should lesson from Frances Alda, who forbids any hint of commercialism to mar her radio program.

Berlinger Wins Illinois All-Round Title Third Time

LEE SENTMAN SETS MARK IN HURDLES RACE

Beetham Stars in Two Relay Triumphs for Ohio State University Quartets

Penn Ace Below Own Record In Again Capturing Feature Competition of Meet

CHAMPAIGN, Ill., March 14.—(AP)—Big Barney Berlinger of Pennsylvania, Lee Sentman, Illinois' [illegible] hurdler, and [illegible] Robert Beetham, Jr., of Ohio State tonight [illegible] on records in the [illegible] renewal of the University of Illinois relay carnival in which one world record was washed out, one was tied, one American [illegible] mark was broken and six meet standards improved.

Berlinger did not [illegible] record for the all-round championship—but an exact [illegible] event—but he did win the [illegible] for the third straight [illegible] something never before accomplished.

Lovshin of University of Wisconsin finished third with [illegible] points. The other [illegible] finished: Fourth, Parker, Lake Forest, 5,080; fifth, Cohn, DePauw, 4,735.5; sixth, H[illegible], North Central, 4,218.5; seventh, Kilgore, DePauw, [illegible]; eighth, Gnabah, Wisconsin, [illegible].

Sentman, a wiry youth, wrecked the world indoor record for the 75-yard high hurdles and [illegible] right back to tie the oldest record in the book—the 8 seconds flat by Carl Johnson of Michigan in the 75-yard lows set in 1920.

OHIO STATE WINS RELAY

Beetham gave a demonstration of middle-distance running that led Ohio State to two relay victories, its first in the history of America's indoor [illegible] classic. In the two-mile relay he raced a great half-mile to nip Turner of Michigan at the tape and his final quarter in the one-mile relay put the Buckeyes out on top again.

The University of Chicago's distance medley of Hennik, Cameron, Brainard and Letts [illegible] an American record-breaking upset in defeating Marquette's defending champions in 10:27.7, lowering a former Marquette mark by three and one-half seconds.

Ray Swartz of Western State Teachers, Kalamazoo, Mich., set a new standard for the 1,500 meters run, winning over Clark Chamberlain, Michigan State College, star, in 4:00.1, and James Gordon of Miami University successfully defended his 300-yard title over a good field.

Little Eddie Tolan, Michigan's Negro sprinter, won the 75-yard dash as expected, defeating Sickle of Kansas in :07.6. In his final heat Tolan did :07.5, one-tenth of a second slower than the world record for the event.

CORNHUSKERS SCORE

Nebraska popped in with three championships. The Cornhuskers won the tricky 320-yard shuttle high hurdle in record time of :40.5, while Hugh Rhea, football star, defeated Sammy Behr of Wisconsin, the Big Ten's best shot putter, with a very creditable heave of 49 feet 11¼ inches and Gray and Tomson took the first two places in the broad jump, the former doing 23 feet 8¾ inches.

JACKETS SCORE EASY VICTORY

The play was rather listless until some eight minutes of the first period had elapsed when Pandon of the Stars set off the Jackets' explosive attack by beating Goalie Cox on a pass from Brown. Three minutes later McGuire knotted the count on a difficult angle shot after a Rodden pass had placed him in scoring position and at 13:22 Capt. Gregg put the locals out in front by converting another Rodden assist into a tally.

RODDEN SCORES GOAL

Rodden's unassisted goal at the [illegible] of the second period was registered on a tricky drive from just inside the Syracuse blue line. Proudfoot took up the scoring burden at 4:52 when Fraser eluded the Stars' defense and fed him a perfect pass at the goal mouth and Pittsburgh led 4 to 1. Shortly after mid-period Teasdale shoved the disc past Cox after taking a pass from Brown and the final stanza opened with the Schooley stalwarts leading 4 to 2.

The locals showed no inclination to nurse their lead but rushed to the attack at every opportunity and kept the play in Syracuse territory most of the time. White lifted the disc over Goalie Ironstone's shoulder after taking a pass from Fields at 6:15 and at 18:09 Gregg concluded the scoring spree by batting his own rebound into the net after Ironstone had made a remarkable save on his first shot. Moore sandwiched a Syracuse goal between White and Gregg tallies. He broke through the local defense unassisted and beat Cox from close in.

Fraser, who sustained a fractured hand in the Cleveland game here a week ago and who was not in the lineup when the locals suffered a surprise set back in Detroit Thursday, returned to action with the injured member in a tape-covered cast. He performed brilliantly until the last five minutes of play when his hand again was injured and he was forced to quit the fight. He was given a great ovation as he quit the ice.

M'CURRY ON BENCH

Duke McCurry, twice knocked out and badly bruised up in the Detroit joust, did not appear on the ice until the last few minutes of play. McGuire took the Duke's position at left wing on the starting front line, and he worked tirelessly in making the new Gregg-Rodden-McGuire combination function almost to perfection.

Syracuse also was not at full strength at the fray. The Stars came here without Happy Holmes, their star center, who was suspended for one game as a result of drawing his third major penalty of the season in his last start.

The Jackets' triumph, easily their most important of the campaign, provided another capacity crowd. Almost every fan in the arena remained seated until after the score of the Cleveland-London game was announced, some five minutes after hostilities here had been halted.

In addition to their game with London Tuesday, the Jackets are to meet Buffalo, league leaders, here Friday. The Buffalo game will mark the finish of the regular season for the locals. The lineup:

[illegible] Ironstone
[illegible] Hughes
[illegible] Teasdale
[illegible] Moore
[illegible] Pelangio
[illegible] Markle

BISONS CLINCH LEAD

FORT ERIE, Ont., March 14.—The Buffalo Bisons clinched first place in the International Hockey League here tonight by turning back the Detroit Olympics, 4 to 2. Victory for the Bisons made it impossible for any team to displace them from the leadership.

The Bisons had all the better of the play throughout and but for the stubborn defense of the Olympics and Venne's masterly work in goal, the score would have been much larger. The lineup:

[illegible] Buffalo [illegible] Herberts [illegible] Buffalo, Voss [illegible] Detroit [illegible] Hoffinger, Lederman.

INDIANS TOP LONDON

CLEVELAND, March 14.—Taking things into his own hands as the game drew near a close, Capt. Gray, center for the Cleveland Indians' hockey team, skated through the entire London outfit here tonight to plant the winning goal and give Cleveland a 4-to-3 victory over the Canadians.

A near-riot followed after the game when spectators threatened Referee La Flamme, claiming a number of unfair decisions against the Indians. Police escorted him unharmed from the rink. The lineup:

[illegible] Abbott
[illegible] Holmes
[illegible] Hicks
[illegible] Neville
[illegible] Grob
[illegible] Pettinger

[illegible] Rodden, Brophy [illegible] London, Lough [illegible] Quennerville, Schneider [illegible] La Flamme [illegible] Pettinger [illegible] Cleveland [illegible] Gray [illegible] Holmes [illegible] Cleveland, Clark [illegible] St. Fabare, 11:13 [illegible] London, Hicks [illegible] Bennikka [illegible] Neville, Hicks [illegible] Cleveland, Gray [illegible]

Downtown Y. M. C. A. Wins Swim Meet

In a triangular swimming meet held in the Downtown Y. M. C. A. pool last evening, the home team swimmers, led by McCoy, won in hollow fashion from Hill Top and Allegheny.

Johnson copped the fancy diving event for Hill Top, but that was the lone victory for the visiting Y. M. C. A. boys.

McCoy won the 100 and 220-yard free style events and finished second in the fancy diving affair. The summary:

100-yard free style—Won by McCoy, Downtown; Davies, Downtown, second. Time, 1 minute 3 seconds.

220-yard free style—Won by McCoy, Downtown; Boyer, Downtown, second. Time, 2 minutes 51 seconds.

Henrys Retain A. A. U. Floor Title

KANSAS CITY, March 14.—(AP)—The Wichita (Kan.) Henry's retained the national A. A. U. basketball championship here tonight by defeating the Kansas City Athletic Club in the final game of the tournament, 38 to 14.

The Los Angeles Athletic Club won third place in the tournament by defeating the Young Men's Institute of San Francisco, 33 to 13, in the playoff game between the defeated semi-finalists. L. A. A. C. led, 13 to 7, at the end of the first half. Charley Hyatt, Los Angeles forward, collected five field goals, some from difficult angles.

Farrell High Wins District X Title

GREENVILLE, Pa., March 14.—Farrell's impressive first-half work earned an easy 34-23 victory over Oil City and the championship of District X in the final game on the Thiel College floor.

Farrell meets the winner of the Sheffield-Dubois game tonight next Saturday on the same floor for intersectional honors in Northwestern Pennsylvania.

By great work in the first half the Steeltown five scored 11 points in each quarter to lead 22-9 at the half. The lead allowed them to coast through the second portion, although Oil City played better ball. The lineup:

| Farrell 34 | | Oil City 23 |
|---|---|---|
| Hall | F | Waltkus |
| Toskin | F | Lilly |
| Pexchuk | C | Boriand |
| Stokosky | G | Chacona |
| Morgan | G | Shaffer |

OIL, we know not whence it came. The SOUL, greatest mystery. ELECTRICITY, used without understanding.

In this picture Mr. McCay shows the two most important servants of industry, OIL and ELECTRICITY, two of three mysterious powers that human beings do not understand.

He shows, also, the greatest of all power on earth, the intelligence, spirit or soul of man, a mystery absolute.

Enlightened by the spirit, we use the oil that Providence has stored in the earth.

Guided by intelligence, we harness and work the electricity that once frightened our ancestors, as it flashed in the sky.

But all three are mysteries.
Whence came the oil?
What is electricity?
What is the spirit of man?
WE DO NOT KNOW.

"For we are but of yesterday, and know nothing, because our days upon earth are a shadow." Job 8:9.

MAN'S mental life is like a monutain range, with high peaks of knowledge and deep valleys of ignorance.

We are here and live and must die. And we work, according to our ability and will. But we do not know WHY we are here, what MAKES us live, why we DIE, what happens to us afterward, or what inspires the WILL to work.

We think, invent, develop ideas. And our intelligence, APPLYING FORCE TO MATTER, creates everything that we possess, from airplane to submarine. But we do not know WHAT force or matter is.

Our two greatest servants are oil and electricity. Explosive power contained in the oil drives our flying machines over 300 miles an hour and has recently driven an automobile on the earth's surface 240 miles an hour.

Heat and power contained in the oil drive locomotives hauling thousands of tons and supply through the Diesel engine and by the production of steam the power for factories, mines, mills and steamships.

But no man knows, actually, whence the oil came, or how it was produced.

We know that it lies in the earth, endless billions of barrels of it. Pumping, or the force of expanding gas, brings it to the surface.

How it got into the earth, originally, what created it, no man knows.

Formerly it was supposed to have been stored for man's future use, as coal was stored, a byproduct of fallen and decaying vegetation.

Now men incline to the idea that untold billions and trillions of minute marine creatures, living, breeding and dying in the waters of the ocean, contributed each its tiny drop to the oil supply.

According to that theory, as you "step on your gas," you are bringing to life and using in the cylinders of your engine the power of untold numbers of tiny creatures that lived and died millions of years ago.

The great oil companies have their "oil problems," the problem of TOO MUCH.

But the real oil problem is "whence did the mysterious oil come, what is it?"

Electricity bears with oil and coal the burden of man's industrial labor.

A waterfall is made to move a turbine, or burning coal produces steam that in turn produces electricity, and man has at his disposal a force limitless in its uses, gigantic in its power, terrific in its speed, and ABSOLUTELY MYSTERIOUS.

That power of electricity kills the criminal in the death chair, combats disease when applied to the living flesh, drives machinery of all kinds, produces heat for the kitchen stove, and intense cold for the refrigerator.

It carries knowledge and music over the radio into millions of homes, washes the clothes, sweeps the floors, cools with fans and heats with apparatus that resists its flow the rooms in which we live.

Electricity, traveling with the speed of light, will carry a message around the earth seven times in less than one second.

We talk across the ocean by telephone, using the wave of electricity as our messenger.

Electricity is our daily servant, companion, friend. And man knows as little about it today as did his savage ancestor who saw the lightning, heard the thunder, imagined that a god was angry at him, and immediately offered sacrifices to some hideous idol.

Ignorance is almost as interesting as knowledge, just as light and darkness interest us almost equally.

And as light follows darkness, so knowledge follows ignorance, in the career of man. In spite of all his littleness, his weakness and ignorance, he represents divine thought and power on this particular speck of floating matter that we call the earth.

Great has been the progress of man; wonderful the knowledge that he has accumulated.

He has conquered the depths of the sea and the heights of the air.

He can look down upon the top of the highest mountain, explore the ocean's depths.

Many volumes are needed to contain a catalogue of the knowledge that men have gradually accumulated, since first they learned to make fire by rubbing two sticks together, and to conquer the beasts by fastening a sharp flint at the end of a stick, and using the elastic force of wood to shoot an arrow.

But as regards FINAL knowledge, men are as much in the dark as they were centuries ago, when the eighth Psalm was written. It shall be repeated here for your reading on this Sunday. Nothing could be more beautiful in thought or in words:

> O Lord our Lord, how excellent is thy name in all the earth! who has set thy glory above the heavens.
> Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings hast thou ordained strength because of thine enemies, that thou mightest still the enemy and the avenger.
> When I consider thy heavens, the work of thy fingers, the moon and the stars, which thou hast ordained;
> What is man, that thou art mindful of him? and the son of man, that thou visitest him?
> For thou hast made him a little lower than the angels, and hast crowned him with glory and honour.
> Thou madest him to have dominion over the works of thy hands; thou hast put all things under his feet:
> All sheep and oxen, yea, and the beasts of the field;
> The fowl of the air, and the fish of the sea, and whatsoever passeth through the paths of the seas.
> O Lord our Lord, how excellent is thy name in all the earth!

Ignorance, like knowledge, is interesting, and most interesting of all ignorance is our ignorance concerning OURSELVES.

Something within us tells how to extract gasoline from oil, and how to build an engine, in which the gasoline will explode, to carry us over the earth.

Something mysterious in the brain of man, without shape, size, weight or color, tells how to bring down from the clouds the electricity that flashes there, how to create electric power here on the earth and use it in ten thousand ways.

But what that power within us REALLY IS, what the nature of that soul spirit, mind or intellect, no man knows. Faith, taught by the world's many religions, tells us that each soul is individually created, sent into the world to do its work for good or ill, and punished or rewarded as it deserves, when life is done.

A man thinks, and his thought becomes a steam engine, a railroad or a great factory.

Another man thinks, and his thought becomes a magnificent painting, or a statue, or is transformed into beautiful music that delights and inspires millions.

A third man thinks, revolution folows, lives are destroyed, governments are overturned, the world's history changes.

A fourth man thinks, and ancient philosophical systems are upset, scientific facts "accepted by everybody, everywhere," are cast into the discard of mistaken theory.

Science tells us that what we call matter is made up of inconceivably small particles of electrical energy.

Our gigantic sun, a million times as big as our earth, with planets revolving around, is, by comparison, only a super-atom of matter in the whole universe.

And the actual atom of earthly chemistry, of which millions are contained in the corner of your eye, is actually a solar system on a smaller scale, with a central sun or nucleus and the electrons or planets revolving around it.

The spirit, greatest of all mysteries, is that which we feel to be truly OURSELVES. Although we cannot identify, locate, measure or weigh it.

The ancient Hebrews believed that the emotions were located in the bowels.

The Greeks thought that the heart was the seat of the emotions, that the brain, a cold grey and white substance, was created only to supply moisture to the eyes and nose.

We know that all thought and emotion is born in part of the brain, in the cortex, a dark, thin substance spread over the surface of the white brain tissue below, as the fertile soil is spread over the earth's core.

That with us is POSITIVE KNOWLEDGE. Surgeons can remove, or disconnect from the nervous system a small part of the brain and speech becomes impossible.

By another operation they can stop all motion on either side of the body, destroy memory, or cause absolute insanity.

We know through what part of the mechanical brain the spirit moves, just as we know how and through what parts of machinery the power of electricity or gasoline do their work.

But what the electricity IS, that works through the dynamo, or what the SPIRIT is, that works through the complicated brain and nerves, we know not at all.

This picture by Mr. McCay is of value because it will arouse thought in the minds of the millions that will see it.

Everything that is worthwhile comes from thought.

Accepting the teachings of Darwin that fascinated and dominated men's minds in his day, Emerson wrote:

"And striving to be man, the worm
"Mounts through all the spires of form."

It is not necessary to believe that the worm started out deliberately to be a man, for he never did. That thought never occurred to any worm.

The worms thought as little about becoming men as the average imperfect man of today thinks of becoming the civilized and perfected being that he will become in future ages.

But there is no doubt that the will to be BETTER, desire to explain mysteries through thought, determination to conquer ignorance, have changed human beings, if not from worms to men, at least from cannibalistic savages to what we are now, a considerable improvement.

Mr. McCay's cartoon, illustrating three great mysteries, suggests thought.

Meet at Acropolis, Learn How Women Stopped Big War

By GEORGE SEIBEL

ARISTOPHANES has got to Pittsburgh at last. The well-known Athenian playwright will be the principal topic in all our Kaffeeklatsches during an entire week, and our active social workers will be undecided whether to praise him for his advocacy of peace or raise their eyebrows in disapproval of his obscenity.

What is obscene? Some of the things the modern producer has cut out of "Lysistrata" as being impossible were part of the required religious ritual when the play was first produced, a mere 2342 years ago. The Athenian demagogues and ward-heelers did secure a censorship which effectually killed the "Old Comedy," but they were not concerned about indecency. No, they were only mad because Aristophanes was exposing the political and social corruption of the times.

The theater then was the newspaper of the people. It was so to a large extent in Shakespeare's time, when contemporary politics was banned also.

And today there are grafters and reactionaries who would welcome a law like that of Alcibiades, which forbade the comic writers from mimicking or representing any living character on the stage.

Throttle the theater and muzzle the movie—except for "our" propaganda.

Propaganda B. C.

Aristophanes was the greatest propagandist of old Greece. He wrote during the terrible Peloponnesian War, which in many ways resembled the World War of recent date. Aristophanes opposed the war, the shouting patriots, the incompetent generals, the grabbing grafters of his day. He was a bad, bad man—not a loyal Athenian.

But he was the greatest comic genius of his age, perhaps of all ages, and one of the loftiest poets. After he was dead, Plato composed this epitaph for him:

"The Graces, seeking an imperishable sanctuary, found the soul of Aristophanes."

And St. Chrysostom, the golden-mouthed orator of Christianity, used to keep the comedies of Aristophanes under his pillow, in order to learn the secret of his eloquence.

His "Lysistrata"

Certainly the plea for peace put into the mouth of Lysistrata is one of the finest ever uttered by human lips. How the corporals who wanted to be colonels, and the colonels who wanted to be generals, must have hated Aristophanes! They tried to prove he was not an Athenian, so they could deport him—but he won out.

"Lysistrata" is a rollicking comedy made out of the raw material of human nature. Gilbert Seldes, who produced the adaptation to be seen at the Alvin Theater, has made very few changes. As for the indecency, anyway, most of that is in the original Greek, and can hardly be translated any more than the poetry can be transmuted. Robert Browning, a decorous poet of the Victorian age, wrote a long

Life's Humdrum Activities Victorious In 'As Husbands Go'

By GILBERT W. GABRIEL

Universal Service Dramatic Critic.

NEW YORK, March 14.

THERE ARE SOME plays you just can't help liking. "As Husbands Go," the latest Rachel Crothers comedy, is that friendly, arm-in-arm, companionable, comfortable sort of play. I haven't seen one more so all this season.

You try to be loftily critical. You growl about an occasional unevenness of talk, and what's happened to counterplot 2-A in the middle act, and is it all true to the inner life—and then you sit back on your high hat and have a perfectly good time. At least I did. Miss Crothers, especially since her "Let Us Be Gay," is one of my most dependable good-time-givers.

The title, "As Husbands Go," states the theme totally. It is another comedy concerning that poor, dejected, mud-caked drudge, the American male in his sad state of middle-age and matrimony.

Lacking in Dash

I have yet to see a native play in which the American husband wears his cravat with half the dash of a Neapolitan courier, or can court his own wife with a quarter the fervor of a French pastry cook. The American husband is traditional. Miss Crothers' comedy accepts the tradition—but goes on from there.

I wonder (it's probably something I have no right to wonder about) whether "As Husbands Go" isn't the precisely right rebuke to another current play called "Tomorrow and Tomorrow?" In both of them the American wife has fallen in love with the young English celebrity.

Just Average Man

In both of them the American husband is an out-of-doors dolt, more at home in the bank or the factory than in the boudoir, a horsey or trout-fishy and faithful personification of the good-natured incompetence of middle-western millionaires to give their wives the needed thrills. And in both of them a little child shall lead them.

Where "Tomorrow and Tomorrow" was out to create a legend, however, "As Husbands Go" succeeds in seeing a comedy. A comedy of constant humor and kindliness, a shrewd twinkle behind its every plain speech. Miss Crothers has her American Isolde, too. But, unlike Mr. Barry, she'll never bolster the poor lady up with hieroglyphic raptures. She simply sets her, sympathetically, but all for the best, back upon the comforts of marital humdrum.

Rapture vs. Humdrum

Come right down to it, and Miss Crothers' comedy is 10 times less frivolous than Mr. Barry's purple-tongued drama. Her proposition, for all its chuckling, is founded on the first commandment of disillusion, the knowledge that life is only one-tenth rapture, nine-tenths humdrum. "Tomorrow and Tomorrow" ends with one of those open-armed speeches to the stars. "As Husbands Go" ends with its married pair trudging contentedly in to the Sunday dinner table.

And there are, and always will be, more Sunday dinners than shooting stars in American married life.

Fine Translation

Lately I had permission to read an unusually fine translation of "The Magnificent Cuckold," a play which has captured the most glowing praises of Europe, and is undoubtedly the masterpiece of the modern repertory. A beautiful play, heart-rending, strange, ablaze with the terror and irony of its idea and with the exquisiteness of the idea's telling. A play with more greatness in its littlest show of grace than I can here explain. And yet, for a sorry fact, a play which probably would prove a grim fiasco if attempted in this theater district of ours. Our fault, not the play's.

German Opera to Give Metropolitan Competition

By GRENA BENNETT

Universal Service.

NEW YORK, March 14.

DURING THE COMING week the steps of many music pilgrims of New York will be directed to Mecca—that is Mecca Auditorium, for in that temple the German Grand Opera Company will begin an engagement.

For the first time in several seasons New York's own Metropolitan Opera Company will have competition. Interesting, too, is the fact that many of the principal members of the visiting organization had, in former years, served in the same capacity at Broadway's lyric temple. Johanna Gadski, the bright particular star of the German troupe, spent 12 years in this city, appearing as the leading dramatic soprano in German and Italian operas.

Tenor and Basso

For a number of winters, Johannes Sembach was heard in the Metropolitan's heroic and romantic tenor characters. Of deeper, musical significance but not more important, however, were the contributions of Carl Braun, who spent several

Aristophanes' Co-Worker Formerly Reporter Here

By WILLIAM J. LEWIS

GILBERT SELDES, who made the modern version of the Aristophanes comedy, "Lysistrata," the bill for the week in the Alvin, did his first professional writing in Pittsburgh—as a cub reporter on the staff of the Pittsburgh Post. He was just out of Harvard, where he was a member of Prof. Baker's "Workshop 47," as the class in drama study was called. He obtained his job through the intercession of his brother, George Seldes, then a star reporter on the staff, who later won fame as a war correspondent, and, ultimately, membership in the authors' union by writing a book, "You can't Print That."

The father of George and Gilbert, who had moved here from the East, conducted a drug store in the Hill district. Gilbert was a "cub" only a couple of months until he obtained the position of music critic on the Philadelphia Ledger. Later he became dramatic editor of the same paper.

Failure as Prophet

Also he went to Europe as an unattached war correspondent. He had written a book explaining why America wouldn't enter the war. It was published the same day America did. Alas for prophets! He was so disgusted that he enlisted.

Anyway, since the day he left a cub reporter's typewriter behind him in Pittsburgh, he has been music and drama critic, playwright, short story writer and book author, whose works include "The Seven Lively Arts," a tome about popular American entertainment, and a novel, "The Wings of the Eagle." The "wings" were weak and the "eagle" didn't soar, but he expects to go into that some time in the capacity of critic, and find out the reason. He also wrote "The Stammering Century," and more recently he has been engaged in "The Future of Drinking."

He has written, too, a few words about his association, in a spiritual way, with Aristophanes, rating him as "the perfect collaborator." Because the old boy was in no position to talk back, one assumes.

Bald at Twenty-Four

"The singular old man with whom I collaborated," Gilbert writes, "may be a master of eternal comedy, but he is certainly not acquainted with modern publicity. The only fact which might be of universal interest is that he was prematurely bald and, after the age of 24, had an impressive but shining dome. He was something of a reactionary and took some shrewd cracks at the intellectual, and his opinion of his contemporaries, especially Socrates and Euripides, has certainly not been upheld by posterity.

"But he is a perfect collaborator. In effect he said: 'Here is my text and you can go ahead with it.' These little favorite lines, which other collaboraters always insist upon keeping in, seemed not to matter to him at all. The old man was fond of puns—perhaps the most dangerous thing in a collaborator,

Movie-Go-Round

BY LOUELLA O. PARSONS

Universal Service.

HOLLYWOOD, March 14.

A MEATLESS diet is now the latest fad in Hollywood to get thin. For weeks we had the 18-day diet. Now Madame Amundsen, masseuse, says the sure way to get thin is to avoid meat. She recommends lemon juice in hot water with a teaspoon of iodized salt the first thing in the morning, a health salad at noon with a glass of tomato juice seasoned with lemon, plenty of grapefruit juice during the day and a vegetable dinner at night. She certainly has worked wonders with this diet and the best part is the people feel well. But, after the 18-day diet, far be it from me to recommend any way to get thin. I almost had to take to the woods to avoid people who wanted to diet. I wanted Madame Amundsen to write a little book, but so far she hasn't had time. Perhaps Prof. Amundsen, her husband, who is also busy on the Fox lot, will write it.

I happen to know that three of our famous actresses in Hollywood had their noses remade this last year. The doctor who did the job, one of our best plastic surgeons, said nary a word about it. He might have gotten world famous, but he was asked to keep the secret and he kept it. I was lunching at a table next to one of the girls and people kept saying to her, "I never saw you look so beautiful. What has happened? You look so lovely," never realizing that she had undergone an operation and had her nose put into plastic shape.

Jim, Hollywood's popular barber, says that he had a tourist from Iowa the other day who wanted to see Marion Davies and Bebe Daniels.

"Read in the papers," said the tourist, "that Miss Davies and Miss Daniels are in business with you and thought I'd like to come and see the girls."

I suppose the tourist expected to see Marion washing hair and Bebe Daniels giving manicures. The girls are planning to manufacture cosmetics and so far it hasn't progressed beyond a plan, but if it goes through it will mean Jim will take larger quarters for his beauty parlors and the girls will be his partners. But I can assure anybody who wants a good shampoo that Marion won't be doing the job and all who want a manicure, I can promise, won't have to have Bebe.

The Four Marx Brothers have made all the real estate men in Los Angeles happy. # The Screen and Its Players

Feminine Stars Dominating New Screen Features

By MILDRED FILLMORE

THE LADIES are dominating the new pictures. Ruth Chatterton, Bebe Daniels, Joan Crawford and Dorothy Mackaill are prominent among the names that are now consuming the electricity in the theater's bright lights.

The appearance of Ruth Chatterton is an event—has been a screen event ever since her "Madame X." Her newest picture is titled "Unfaithful" and it is the Fulton and the Sheridan Square booking.

Again Miss Chatterton is the personification of suffering womanhood. And again in her latest role makes the noble gesture. She faces the music, as it were, in an effort to keep her brother from knowing that her husband and brother's wife have been indiscreet. All of which has the sound of sophisticated drama.

John Cromwell directed the film. The action takes place in London and some of Europe's gay spots. The cast include Paul Lukas, Paul Cavanagh and Juliette Compton.

Comes Disillusionment

Joan Crawford is the star of "Dance, Fools, Dance," the new picture in the Penn. This presents the story of a rich girl, who, suddenly forced to make her own living, gets a newspaper job and learns that her brother is a great big racketeer. And after her disillusionment comes the climax. Lester Vail, William Bakewell, Cliff Edwards, William Holden, Purnell Pratt and Thelma Todd are in the cast.

The novel, "Ex-Mistress," has come to the Stanley in movie form and under the title, "My Past." It is one of those romantic triangles and the parties of the first, second and third parts are none other than Bebe Daniels, Ben Lyon and Lewis Stone. Other players are Joan Blondell, Natalie Moorhead, Albert Gran, Virginia Sale and Daisy Belmore.

In the story of "My Past," two wealthy business men get goofy about a beautiful and talented star of the stage.

Gangsters March

"The Last Parade," another movie of a gangster's final fadeout, is the new booking in the Warner. Jack Holt, Tom Moore and Constance Cummings have the leading roles. The picture marks the first time that Holt has played a racketeer. In his movie career he has been about everything else, including soldier, sailor, cowboy and "the other man." In the film a newspaper man is "put on the spot" and then things begin to happen.

A drama of modern marriage, titled "Kept Husbands," is the film in both the Davis and the Enright. It tells about a wealthy man's daughter who marries one of papa's poor employes. Joel McCrea and Dorothy Mackaill have the featured roles.

"Aloha," with Raquel Torres and Ben Lyon, is the Harris picture. It concerns an American who tries to Americanize his South Sea wife and finds it is a rather difficult job.

Charlie Chaplin's talkless comedy, "City Lights," continues as the Aldine feature. It is the old Chaplin again, keenly displaying his comic and tragic pantomime.

CHEER UP!

Lily Pons, New Opera Star, Comes

By J. FRED LISSFELT

WHEN THE SEASON begins to wane, then comes the onrush of new stars, eager to have a hearing before the drop of the curtain. Certainly there has been but one sensational appearance in New York's arena during the year, the debut of Lily Pons.

Heretofore reviewers have questioned the genuineness of all debutantes, and one by one they have disappeared from the Metropolitan stage after a very short career. But now all who have heard Lily Pons agree that a real voice, a real musician and a charming girl are united in this person. We shall hear her Monday night.

Herbert Protege

Another star is a singer, too. George Trabert is a local boy, whom Victor Herbert encouraged, took to New York, and made him into a musical comedy hero. But Trabert had deeper stuff in him, and, when he had earned sufficient, he ran away to Milan, where he perfected his voice. Opera engagements in little Italian towns followed. He sang in the French provinces. For three years he was Mme. Beriza's leading tenor in the Theater Potiniere in Paris, doing all sorts of modern one-act operas.

Two years ago he went to Munish to get his German repertory from Anna von Mildenburg. He was admitted without question to the academy and given a scholarship. Concerts and opera engagements in Munich, Bremen, Mainz, the casinos at the Baltic watering places, and in Salzburg brought him further renown. Just recently on three days' notice he learned a new role for the Wurzburg opera and was the star of the performance.

During his Salzburg days I heard his Lohengrin, Don Jose, and Max in the Freischuetz, and was carried away with the intensity of his dramatic force as well as his fine voice. His singing of Strauss songs is a joy forever. It is

Fame Miss Shearer Once Longed For Not Important Now

By LOUELLA O. PARSONS,

Motion Picture Editor Universal Service

LOS ANGELES, March 14.

THE FIRST TIME I ever saw Norma Shearer she had her chin up, her head in the air and an independence about her that gave me a very good idea that one day this young Canadian would make them all notice her. She was having lunch with me at the Algonquin Hotel in New York, brought there by Eugene Mullins, a scenario writer. This was years before she met Irving Thalberg or had tasted the sweets of the screen success that is hers today.

"You ought to know Norma Shearer," Eugene Mullins told me, "she has just signed a contract with the Goldwyn company and she is leaving for Hollywood tomorrow."

There were dozens of young girls about to make a name for themselves that I had been told I ought to know before they crashed the dizzy citadel of fame.

Weight in Words

I probably wouldn't have paid much attention to Eugene's words if he hadn't been an old friend.

"Honestly," he told me, "this girl is different. She has a real personality, ability and beauty."

I agreed with him after one look at her. But it wasn't her beauty that first took my attention. It was a gay, brave little air, masquerading as independence, that captivated me. Here she was in the Algonquin dining room surrounded by the cream of Broadway talent. Sitting side by side with actresses whose names were famous the world over, there was an irresistible something about her that made her far more interesting than any other [illegible] in the room.

Tried to Impress

A quaint child she was, trying to impress upon me that contract players were not just ordinary actress, they were really important.

Years after, Norma told me that she made a vow that some day she would sweep into that Algonquin dining room and make all the celebrities point her out and say:

"That is the famous actress, Norma Shearer."

I had luncheon with her a few weeks ago in her dressing room

Films Josh Hollywood

EDUCATIONAL recently introduced a vogue for Hollywood comedies which has become so popular that three new laughmakers based on the Hollywood theme are now forthcoming from the comedy company.

Mack Sennett takes a special delight in turning the guns on the Hollywood he loves, and every now and then brings forth a comedy that satirically exposes that great American phenomenon—Hollywood.

Giving credit to the stage play, "Once in a Lifetime," for his inspiration, Mr. Sennett will shortly have ready for release a comedy called "In Conference," which concerns a Jewish and a Scotch producer who have under a million dollar contract one of the screen's biggest box-office bets—a virile hero—over whom the girls go gaga until the dawn of the sound era, when he reveals a high soprano.

JOEL M'CREA and Dorothy Mackaill are in "Kept Husbands," film showing in the Davis and Enright.

Alan Crosland Is Weary Of Being Film Pioneer

By JERRY HOFFMAN,

Universal Service.

HOLLYWOOD, March 14.

EVEN A PIONEER, you know, has his moments. There comes a time in the life of every pathfinder, when a paved road looks mighty inviting. Thus with Alan Crosland. He's fed up with being a "first."

Mr. Crosland

"I don't mind being second, third, or even tenth," he says. "The position doesn't matter as long as what I do is good."

Crosland can't be blamed. "First" is a terribly lonesome spot. It was Alan Crosland, for example, who directed the very first singing-talking feature with Al Jolson. If you've forgotten, it was "The Jazz Singer." It was Alan Crosland who "firsted" again, when he directed "On With the Show," the initial movie production to combine sound and color.

Even then he wasn't through "firsting." It remained for Alan to be the pioneer in directing the first operetta written for the screen, by Sigmund Romberg and Oscar Hammerstein II. The operetta "Viennese Nights," is the last of his firsts.

"It isn't that I'm not grateful for the opportunities I've had," Alan explained. "You don't get opportunities to meet men like Romberg and Hammerstein every day, and they are geniuses. They did beautiful work for 'Viennese Nights,' and I think we have a good picture.

Craves Less Worry

"For a change, I'd like just a good story and a good cast of players minus the worry of innovation. It doesn't matter whether it is along lines that aren't very new. When you come right down to it, nothing is very new, but it would be great to have nothing to worry about but turning out a highly dramatic story, with a very capable cast to play it."

Crosland hasn't spent the major part of his life pioneering. Between "firsts" he directed such pictures as "General Crack," with John Barrymore, in fact, made most of the pictures which starred Barrymore in the remote silent days. (How's your memory?) There also was "Enemies of Women," directed in that same dim era, which still is referred to as one of the silent classics.

First Press Agent

What's more, Alan Crosland "used to be a newspaperman himself." He didn't tell me. If he had, I wouldn't have believed it. And—omi-gosh!—he was the "first" movie publicity director. Yeh! The first film press agent. For the Edison Company, in those days.

There's something to live down!

Harry Todd With Jones

Harry Todd, well known character actor, and Bill Bletcher, famous cowboy player, have been assigned to important roles in the latest Buck Jones special production, "The Fighting Patrol." This drama is seventh in a series of eight outdoor westerns that Jones is making. Carmelita Geragthy has the steller feminine part. Ross Lederman is directing.

Jack Will Buy Round Trip Because He Didn't—Once

By MARQUIS BUSBY,

Universal Service.

HOLLYWOOD, March 14.

BEFORE SUMMER rolls around again Jack Mulhall is going to be gazing upward at the Eiffel Tower, walking down Bond street, and getting seasick on Channel boats. In other words, he's treating himself to a nice vacation, and he's buying a round trip ticket this time, too.

The last time Jack took in the European sights he neglected to provide for a way home. That was long before he became a famous motion picture star.

Goes to See World

A relative was so considerate as to leave Jack a fortune of several thousand dollars, and the young heir set out to see the world.

"When I set out to see the sights," Jack smiled, "I didn't use any half-way measures. I lived like an Indian rajah—while it lasted. You can't continue to buy champagne on a beer income, and it wasn't long before I was broke—with the Atlantic Ocean between young Mulhall and home."

Mr. Mulhall

It is really an awfully sad story, but Jack stoked his way back on a slow vessel. It took 10 days, and there was a storm every minute.

"The other stokers were Liverpool Irishmen, and so tough you could kick them in the face and they wouldn't even yell," he continued. "It was lucky that I am Irish, or I probably wouldn't have lived to tell the tale. Anyway, you can see why I'm being so firm about a round trip ticket this time."

That infectious Dublin grin of Jack's has been brightening screen plays for a good many years now. He has been the romantic young gentleman opposite many of the famous stars of our times. He has been the boy who won the girl in pictures with Norma and Constance Talmadge, Corinne Griffith, Colleen Moore, Dorothy Mackaill, and others. He is very much present in the Douglas Fairbanks picture, "Reaching for the Moon."

Veteran of Films

It is hard to believe that Jack is a veteran of more than 400 motion picture roles. He was with Biograph and D. W. Griffith in the old days, and the first time he ever donned makeup in California was in 1915. He has never been starred, and he never wants to be a star. And he doesn't look a day older than when he played with Constance Talmadge in "The Goldfish," and that must be 10 years ago.

Right now Jack is making "Waiting at the Church," an all-color production, for Radio Pictures. He will make one, and perhaps two more, and then Europe.

"I don't know for sure, but I've always thought that Jack was really just Jackie Coogan in disguise. He's the most youthful person I know.

Local Tenor In Concert

George Trabert, tenor, will be joint star with Nathan Milstein, violinist, in the closing Art Society concert in Carnegie Music Hall on Friday evening. He will sing the aria from the opera "Freischutz," by Weber, and a group of songs in Italian, Spanish, French, German and English. Nathan Milstein's program will include "Trille du Diable," by Tartini; Prelude and Gavotte in E Major, by Bach; Goldmark's Concerto in A Minor; Hymne au Soleil, by Rimsky-Korsakoff; Le vol du Bourdon, by Rimsky-Korsakoff; Romance, by Wagner, and Scherzo Tarantella, by Wieniawski.

New Heroine For Mr. Dix

Marion Shilling has been signed to play the role of Kitty in "Big Brother," Richard Dix's next starring vehicle. Boris Karloff was recently announced for the part of Coky Joe.

CHARLIE CHAPLIN in "City Lights," showing for a second week in the Aldine Theater.

It will be the talk of the town in every Pantopoleion and some people will be shocked. To revive their wilting morals they might go to a burlesque show and find out what real indecency is without brains or poetry.

"Thin Ice" at Pitt

Or they might prefer to skate over "Thin Ice" in the Pitt Theater, where George Sharp has imported Francis X. Bushman to appear in a comedy by Percival Knight. It is a title like "As You Like It" or "Comedy of Errors" that will fit almost any play. Anne Forrest will have the leading feminine role.

Bushman was a matinee idol of the silent movies, but we know nothing about his tonsils or vocal chords. He plays the part of a husband who has taken to drink while his wife flirts. Such things have been heard of—and there is prospect of good drama in "Thin Ice," which must not be confused with "Lysistrata," though the title fits both plays.

Old Greek's Co-Worker Known Here

because the party of the second part invariably dislikes them.

"Aristophanes' method with me was more than generous. I don't know whether, after 23 centuries, the jokes had gone stale on him, but he waived them out, and I think his only point was that I should put in none of my own. I was happy to agree.

"He was a little confusing at times because, like myself, he seemed to think that a series of speeches constituted a play, and that anybody could guess the necessary stage business.

Always on Hand

"What I especially like about him was that he had no other appointments. If I had to review a show he was perfectly willing to stay at home and work on the script—not that the script showed much improvement from the original when he got done with it—but, at least, he never said that I wasn't doing my share.

"And perhaps it might be mentioned in his favor—or as accounting for my friendly feeling toward him—that this eminent Greek gentleman waived all claims to royalties."

Office Boy Is Promoted To Position of Actor

Property boys have been turning actor overnight at the Fox studios for a long time and now an office boy rises to demonstrate screen talent can be found in other departments. William Maddox, 20 years old, late of the reception room at Movietone City, is now a full-fledged actor.

For a year Maddox worked as general utility boy in the office, greeting visitors, answering telephone calls and delivering mail to authors and stars. All the time he hoped for a chance to act.

Maurine Watkins, writer who adapted the novel, "Doctors' Wives," to the screen, was impressed with young Maddox's personality and winning smile. She mentioned the fact to Director Frank Borzage, who forthwith had a test made of the youth. The result was a total loss to the ranks of office boys. Maddox was given the part of Warner Baxter's laboratory assistant in "Doctors' Wives."

Maddox has passed the word along that his job in the office need not be held open for the time when he finishes the picture. He's not going back to it. This first taste of screen acting is too sweet not to follow up.

Lily Pons Sings Monday Night

When Lily Pons, the vocal sensation of the year, makes her bow before a Pittsburgh audience tomorrow evening at Carnegie Music Hall, she will include the "Mad Scene" aria from "Lucia," with flute obligato by Luigi Alberghini, on her program. Other numbers will be Mozart's aria of the Queen of the Night, from "The Magic Flute," air from "The Czar's Bride," "To Vois la-Bas," by Rimsky-Korsakoff; the Bell Song from "Lakme," by Delibes; "Les Filles de Cadiz," by Delibes; "Le Rossignol," by Saint-Saens; "Amarilli," by Caccini; "Se tu M'ami," by Pergolesi, Georgian Song, by Rachmaninoff, and "Giovine Pastore," by Adone Zecchi.

BY LOUELLA O. PARSONS

Hills, the other two to Hollywood and the fourth to Los Angeles. Harpo Marx remained undisturbed by all this panic. He is living in an apartment hotel and he isn't married.

Ivan Lebedeff is not only Hollywood's best hand-kisser and monocle-wearer but a young man of discerning taste. He picked out for me the four most beautiful women in Hollywood. Maybe I shall get in wrong with Ivan if I tell, but Cecil Beaton, famous photographer, mentioned the six he thought the most beautiful, so why not Mr. Lebedeff? Ivan says Mary Pickford, Marion Davies, Constance Bennett and Corinne Griffith are the four beauties of our town.

"And," says he politely, "it's difficult to say which one is the most beautiful, they are all so different."

Ann Harding wears a most interesting wrist watch. It is unusually large for a woman and I could not help but ask her about it. She told me it belonged to her father, Col. George Gatley, and that it had gone with him to the Spanish-American War, to the Boxer Rebellion and to the World War. She said it had timed many a barrage and that it had been under fire with her father innumerable times. Her father died a few months ago and asked that she be given this watch as a memento.

One of the most intelligent women in Hollywood is Ina Claire. Ina doesn't brag about her brains nor does she try to impress people with her erudite mind. But she is a young woman of rare good sense. Everyone admires the way she has handled the John Gilbert situation. It wasn't easy to come back here after a break with Jack and meet all of their friends. But she has carried off the whole situation in such a manner that the people who before were prone to criticize her are now her good friends.

generous of the Art Society to give him a place beside Milstein on their next program, a concert which should reveal two sterling artists.

The Yost Quartet plays the last recital of their season this Sunday afternoon in the Hotel Schenley. Three fugues of Beethoven and a quartet of Gretchaninoff sound like an original program. The soloist, Helen Bell Rush, also will contribute a novelty. This young local soprano bears a fine reputation and her singing of the Pizzetti songs with string quartet accompaniment should be most entertaining.

An Extra Treat

The most generous musical society in town is that at the Young Men and Women's Hebrew Association. As an extra treat for its patrons we are to hear this Sunday evening a most promising virtuoso, Max Epstein, a disciple of Leopold Auer.

Epstein still is in his teens, and he already has an enormous repertory. Tonight he plays the Tschaikowsky Concerto, a Brahms Sonata, and several attractive shorter compositions.

Oland Cast In Mystery

"The Drums of Jeopardy," film version of Harold B. MacGrath's mystery story, has been completed. In the cast are Warner Oland, June Collyer, Lloyd Hughes, Florence Lake, Hale Hamilton, George Fawcett, Wallace MacDonald, Ernest Hilliard, Ann Brody and Mischa Auer.

New Comedian In Academy Bill

"Satan's Daughters" will open in the Academy Theater with the customary Sunday midnight show. Bobby Vail, comedian, joins the cast to help Billy Hagan in the funmaking. Margie Bartel, Pittsburgh soubret, is featured in cast. She will introduce several new specialties. Stella Novak, Anna Toebe and Navarro Hallo will have leading roles. Irvin Schaffer, tenor, will be heard in new numbers.

Fame That Miss Shearer Once Longed For Is Not Important to Her Now

at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Studios, and we both laughed at the memory of that day.

"If you went into the Algonquin today," I told her, "all the people you stared at that day would be falling over themselves just to get a look at you."

Mind Now Changed

But being stared at is not what Mrs. Irving Thalberg would crave today. Norma is much less "grand" than she was then. She still occupies the plain little dressing room that she first came to as a Metro-Goldwyn Mayer star.

"I am the sort of girl," she said, "who clings to old friends, and old customs. I have never worked for any company in Hollywood but Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and I would feel lost anywhere else."

"Is that the reason you married the boss?" I asked her.

"No, I would have married Irving if he had been a $50 a week clerk. I happened to love him, but it is nice that he went along with the company and didn't belong on another lot."

Someone once said of Norma Shearer that she always did the right thing and exactly what was expected of her.

Prayers Answered

When she married Irving Thalberg she endeared herself immeasurably to his parents by adopting his religion. When her baby was born, everyone in the family prayed for a boy, and Norma, at the proper time, became the mother of a son.

I hope I haven't made the heroine of this story sound smug. A girl with Norma's sense of humor couldn't be. You may think any actress who turned out two outstanding successes like "The Divorcee" and "Strangers May Kiss" has a right to be a little upstage.

Not Norma. She is too regular and too happy that her pictures have turned out well. I want to add my word here that Irving Thalberg may have surrounded his wife with excellent stories, good directors and talented dialogue writers but I know that Norma not only brought her personality to the screen, but she furnished a good share of the ideas for her pictures as well.

It Couldn't Be Done

When the Thalberg heir was born his parents hoped to keep him out of the limelight. But, with Irving constantly displaying the young man's picture, and Norma talking with other motion picture mothers about children, well, it couldn't be done.

Irving, Jr., isn't to have "Don't" said to him and he is never going to be nagged.

"Not by me," said Norma. "I want him to think of me as a playfellow, not as someone who is always reprimanding him."

Dear me, I mustn't get into a child and parent discussion. After all, the beautiful and successful actress, Norma Shearer, is our subject.

Rome in Change Film Talk Topic

Rome in transition is to be one of the topics in Burton Holmes' new series of pictured travel revues to be presented in Carnegie Music Hall, beginning Wednesday evening, March 18. Other features of this course will be Oberammergau and the Passion Play of 1930, North African tour, through Morocco, Algeria and Tunisia, grand tour of Europe, and finally, as the novelty of the course, a story of the great black empire of Ethiopia and of the recent coronation ceremonies of Emperor Haile Salassie I.

Between Us Girls

By Lloyd Mayer

The Bazoozle Diamonds! No Less

AS CASSANDRA CARLTON and Reggie Snook entered the brilliantly illuminated Mu'dienna Café, the head waiter hurled forward and bowed obsequiously.

"Good evening, Grovel," said Reggie pleasantly.

"A nice table for two, sir?" suggested Grovel, leading them through the crowded room, which resounded with the crash of music, dishes and conversation.

"This will do very nicely," remarked Reggie, pausing at a table which had been reserved.

"But that is engaged, sir!" protested Grovel, unhappily.

"That's why I want it!" snapped Mr. Snook, placing a chair for Sandie.

"My dear, I'm so THRILLED I could shell PEAnuts!" she confessed gleefully as they seated themselves. "I mean this is PRACticably the FIRST time I've dined OUT anywheres since we've been in BerMUda—can you COPE with it?"

REGGIE, who was studying the menu, smiled vaguely.

"My dear, I can't BEAR it!" whispered Sandie, clutching Reggie's arm as he finished giving his order, "here comes the DUCHess!"

"What duchess, and who's the bloke with her?" he inquired arrogantly.

"The Duchess of REEK, my dear—and that's the Earl of Cloves-SWIZzlewurst WITH her—can you COPE with it? I mean they're ALways barging BLITHEly hither and YON together, my dear!"

BY THIS TIME Grovel, who had darted off to receive the distinguished customers, had steered them right up to the table which Sandie and Reggie were occupying.

"Thees iss the table I had reserve for you, Monsieur!" he gabbled to the Earl piteously, "but Meestaire Snook—he inseest—"

"You are the EARL but I was the EARLIER!" laughed Reggie raucously. The Duchess was staring at Sandie through her lorgnette. "Why, my dear!" she yelped suddenly, "I believe I KNOW you, don't I?"

Sandie rose and dropped her a low curtsey. "This is a GREAT honor, your Highness," she said prettily. "Won't you sit DOWN?"

The titled dame smiled condescendingly as Reggie was presented. "Shall we sit here for a bit?" she asked the Earl, who was lifting Sandie's fingers to his lips.

"Quite," he agreed with a balmy smile.

Reggie had already sprung forward and pulled out a chair for the Duchess. As she sat, he forgot to push it in again, and the great lady plumped heavily on the floor with a thud that brought the plaster down in several places.

"My error!" exclaimed Reggie contritely.

"My GARDen TOOLS!" shrieked Sandie in consternation.

"My—er—!" gasped the Duchess painfully.

"My, my!" mildly observed the Earl. "You are growing beastly unwieldy, y'know, Rosa," he added with some heat as the Duchess got to her feet with a smothered oath and looked around her challengingly.

Grovel hurried forward agitatedly. "Please, I have feex a table for you," he yammered distractedly. The Duchess drew herself up proudly and, snorting haughtily, took Swizzlewurst's arm.

As they moved away, Sandie did not attempt to minimize her vexation. "The Duchess is SIMply LIVid!" she hissed at Reggie, "and I MUST say I don't BLAME her! You were POSitively inSULTing, no less!"

MR. SNOOK looked properly chastened as he toyed with his fish which had somehow escaped into a finger bowl and was swimming about nimbly.

"And aNOTHer thing," pursued Sandie, gathering momentum, "you were TERribly rude to my FRIENDS. You know PERfectly WELL they expected to DINE with us here and what did YOU do but deLIBerately send them over to aNOTHer TAble where they're prob'ly sitting HEAVily at this point on the VERGE of colLAPSE from starVAtion!"

"Can't they buy their own dinners?" protested Reggie. "Anyhow, I can't see that old fossil Fitzrummy. Who is he, anyway?"

"I couldn't be SURE, my dear," she replied idly. "I know he started OUT as a chiROPodist—but he got off on the wrong FOOT."

"And as for Gerald Flingpudding," sneered Reggie, "he still owes me the five smackers he borrowed from me junior year at Yale to rent the soup-and-fish he wore to take YOU to the Prom!"

Before Sandie could reply, their waiter reappeared and set down a tremendous platter in front of Reggie, removing the cover with a flourish and a look of triumph.

"So this is the minute steak!" said Mr. Snook, peering at the dish acutely from various angles. "Well, garcon, you better bring a magnifying glass. This steak's so miNUTE I can't see it with the naked eye!"

"THERE it is, silly!" jeered Sandie, lifting up a piece of parsley.

"Well, all I can say is your eyesight is better than mine!" Reggie confessed with some admiration. "By the way," he continued as he swallowed the steak and helped her to the gravy, "What's the Duchess doing with all that glassware around her neck?"

"GLASSware!" ejaculated Sandie ironically. "My dear old horse, THOSE are the BAZOOZLE DIamonds, no less!"

"Not the Bazoozle diamonds!" gasped Reggie, who had never even heard of them. "Not those famous stones of which it has been said that there has been so much blood shed over them that they ought to have become rubies!"

"Aren't they SIMply EXquisite!" marveled Sandie, her eyes fixed on the Duchess who at that moment was floundering by in the throes of a one-step, clutching the Earl of Cloves-Swizzlewurst with the desperation of the dancer who has abandoned all hope of ever getting another partner.

THE LIGHTS had been dimmed, and the Duchess with her flashing gems looked like a gas buoy gone adrift amid crowded shipping on a stormy night.

"There's that ass, Col. Lunchamper," muttered Reggie, scanning the couples on the floor.

"And there's GERald, my dear!" cried Sandie excitedly. "He's with the OTHers at that big table over there—SEE?"

At that moment the lights went out for perhaps half a minute. When they blazed up, the Duchess of Reek was standing in the middle of the ballroom, clutching at her throat, from which the necklace had disappeared!

"My jewels!" she croaked, hysterically.

"Shut up, Rosa!" commanded the Earl, seizing her roughly by the arm. "Do you want to make a scene, you fool?"

"Certainly I want to make a scene," she admitted, frankly. "It's good publicity."

Pandemonium ensued. Waiters beat patrons over the head with club sandwiches. Sandie was simply stupefied, as she confessed later. She saw Lord Cecil Cheesboro approaching. He brushed against Reggie as he passed; hesitated, and muttered an apology.

"My dear, isn't it ALL simply too AWful for WORDS?" Sandie shrieked at him. "DO sit DOWN, my dear, and have a SANDwich!"

"No thanks, really," he declined with a sickly grin—and fled . . .

Sandie and her escort left the place shortly afterward, and took a carriage for the ride home.

"Gosh, my dear," reflected Sandie, "I WONder who could have snitched her NECKlace, don't YOU?"

"What I want to know is who put it in my coat pocket," replied Reggie uncomfortably as he produced the Bazoozle diamonds and laid them in her lap.

The Smathers Lost Lot Case

CASE NO. 1,611 in the files of the old Eagle Orb Agency is not only a record of one of our most successful operations, but of a deed of charity such as is rarely performed by an organization of our kind.

It was undertaken in the beginning without hope of great reward, and the result stands as a monument to the philanthropy of our famous concern.

In the spring of 1929 there appeared in our New Office an old gentleman in a rusty looking frock coat and wearing a black string tie and a goatee, who gave the name of Salisbury Smathers, of New Brunswick, N. J. His appearance was anything but prosperous, but his manner so impressed me that I gave him an immediate audience.

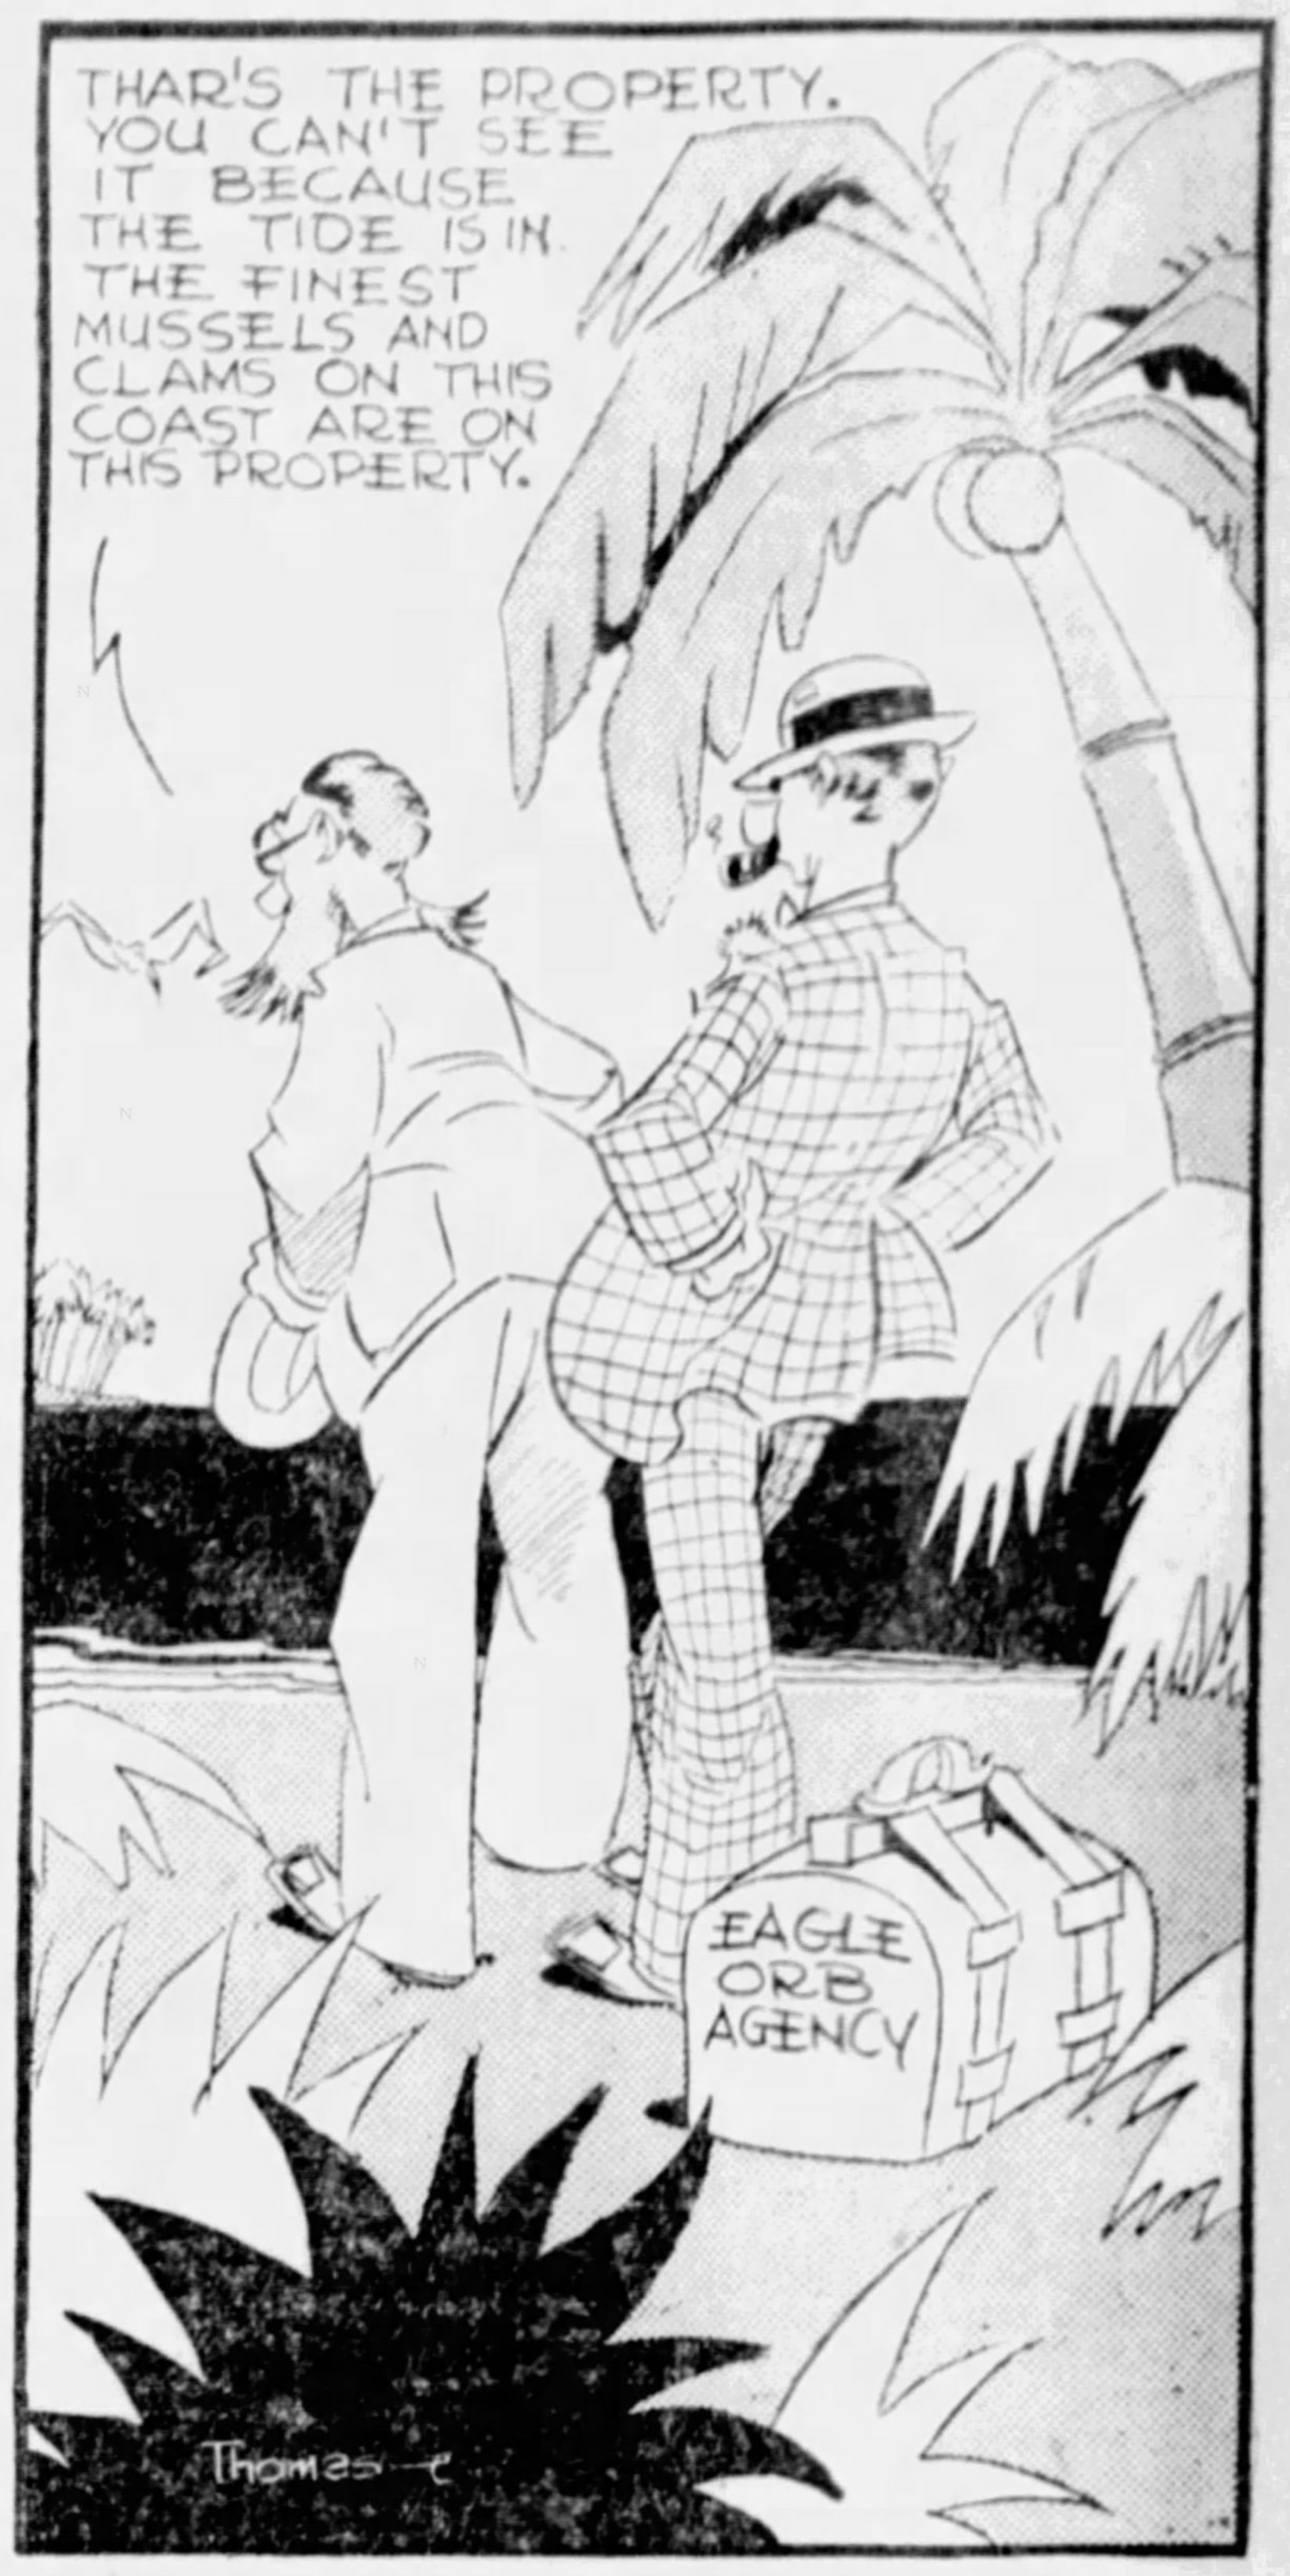
"FIVE YEARS AGO," said Mr. Smathers, "I was one of the most prosperous grocers in New Brunswick. I was able to give my wife and 10 children, also my wife's father and mother and two brothers and four sisters all the comforts of a good home.

"But, alas, I am now practically penniless. My business has been wiped out. My wife and 10 children, also my wife's father and mother and one brother and four sisters are well nigh starving. The other brother is in jail for stealing a ham, so he is all right."

"Your's is a sad case," I said with great feeling, for I could see that Mr. Smathers was above the average in intelligence. "But what can I do for you?"

"In the days of my greatest prosperity," said Mr. Smathers, "I invested some money in town lots in the town of Grapefruitiana on the East Coast of Florida.

"I bought this property on the word of a gentleman in whom I had implicit confidence, though I have never been in Florida. I paid cash for the lots, and have the deeds in a bureau drawer at home.



THAR'S THE PROPERTY. YOU CAN'T SEE IT BECAUSE THE TIDE IS IN. THE FINEST MUSSELS AND CLAMS ON THIS COAST ARE ON THIS PROPERTY.
EAGLE ORB AGENCY
Thomas

"I HAD FORGOTTEN the investment," continued Mr. Smathers, "until poverty overtook me, and I was compelled to realize on every available asset to feed those dependent on me. They are all hearty eaters. Then I remembered my Florida holdings and wrote to Grapefruitana to ascertain their value, if any. To my great astonishment I received a reply to the effect that my property has become utterly lost. I mean no one down there can find it.

"Now then," he went on, "I have often heard of the wonderful work of the Eagle Orb Agency in locating lost and stolen goods and I appeal to you to find our missing estate. I can promise you no considerable fee but you will be doing an enormous act of charity."

At this point Mr. Smathers began to weep, and my heart was so touched that I wept with him. I told him the Eagle Orb was not a charitable institution, but that I would personally guarantee all the assistance in my power, and the thought of all those starving Smatherses was so strong on me the next morning that I took a train to Florida.

ON ARRIVING at Jacksonville, I learned that Grapefruitana was a small town on the sea coast, and difficult of access. In fact I was several days getting there, and I found that Grapefruitana was scarcely more than a village, and was called Grapefruitana because no grape fruit grew within many miles of the place. It was given over largely to fishing pursuits.

I had the deeds to Mr. Smathers' property with me, and I at once visited the local officials who might be expected to know something about such matters, but after examining my deeds they one and all declared that they knew of no locality that fitted the description in the documents.

I was leaving the town hall greatly nonplussed when I was accosted by an old gentleman with long whiskers, which were stained a mahogany color by the tobacco he was chewing.

"LET ME SEE them papers," he requested, apparently having heard of my mission, and I gladly turned over the deeds. He studied them at length, occasionally expectorating a long thin stream of tobacco juice, and finally he said:

"Come with me, neighbor."

He led me to the outskirts of the town, and to a spot at the edge of the ocean, and waving his hands as if to indicate the sad sea waves, he said:

"Thar's the property. You can't see it because the tide is in. But when the tide is out, you can see every lot, and believe me, neighbor, the finest mussels and clams on this coast are on the property."

* * *

I HUNG AROUND there for several hours until the ebb tide, and saw that what the old gentleman said was quite true. The beach taken in by Mr. Smathers' deeds fairly swarmed with shell fish. That was over a year ago and today there is no more well-fed family in the United States than Mr. Smathers and his wife and 10 children and Mrs Smathers' father and mother, and one brother and four sisters, for on my return home I transported them all in a second hand Ford truck to Grapefruitana, and they have been living on the fat of the beach ever since.

OH WELL I'VE SEEN WORSE HOBBIES
3-18
MG

IMPRESSIVE LOOKING GENTLEMAN — Good evening. Might I have 15 cents worth of baloney?

DAVE—Fifteen cents baloney—Here we are, sir—Nice day, oops—18 cents alright?

I. L. G.—Yes. Er a half pound of Swiss cheese.

DAVE—Yessir. See that lady. That's Mrs. Noftolis. A pain!!! She's got a daughter. She sez—you should see all the lawyers that chase after my Gloria. I sez, why not, the back of her looks like an ambulance, don't it? Oops, three quarters of a pound of cheese alright?

I. L. G.—Er, yes, and a pint of cream.

DAVE—Quart, O. K. Sure take a quart. Wot else, sir? Nothing? O. K., that's 18-24 make 42-66—thank your, sir.

I. L. G.—This is my card.

DAVE—Aha—E. Throckmorton Fish. Put it here, Mr. Fish. Come in again. We got all fresh stuff. Beautiful seats for your sandwiches—and—

MR. FISH—Ahem, the fact is, I—er wish to speak to you about a little matter concerning my wife—Mrs. Fish.

DAVE—She's in a jam?

MR. FISH—Needless to say you will treat this matter with professional secrecy. Mrs. Fish, sad to say, is the victim of a tendency toward a well—ahem, let us call it a whim. This whim is known to pyschologists under the term of—er—kleptomania—hm—

DAVE—Aha!!! So she's going to put the prowl on my joint, eh, and your tipping me off, eh, Mr. Fish.

MR. FISH—So if you should notice any predelictions along this line, I beg of you to be discreet. Just take note of whatever she—um—appropriates and I'll be responsible.

DAVE—I get ya, Mr. Fish. Instead of me following your wife out onto the sidewalk and tapping her on the shoulder and saying Pardon me, lady, I'm the store detective. A pretzel just jumped into your handbag. You just want me to hand you the bill.

MR. FISH—And, I'll be much obliged to you, sir. Good day, and many thanks for your kind co-operation in a situation requiring tact, delicacy and good sense.

Two Weeks Later

DAVE—Hey Mike. Pipe the dame getting out of the taxi outside. Well wait'll I tell you about her. It's a knockout. She's one of them society dames, that's got sticky fingers. Her husband is a big wowser, and he don't want no rumpus about it in the papers, so he gives me the office to play straight with her and slip him the swindle sheet.

Well, the other morning she blows in, and rooks an anchovy. You shoulda seen. Snagged her little finger through it and strutted out like it was a new engagement ring. Its just a hobby. She don't eat the stuff, she gives it to the charity bazaar after she rooks it.

Well, in pops the old man pronto and lays six cents on the counter. Ferget it, sez I. Not just for one lil' anchovy. That ain't really nothin—you should see what some of my regular customers get away with.

Boy, I could write a book. Nix, he says. You are doing your stuff, and I'll do mine. Nothing janitorial about that gent. Well this kleptomania thing is getting to be a big angle. Get a load of the dame's record.

Tuesday I have a pickled herring here that I couldn't give away for nothing. Who scrams out, but Mrs. Fish with the herring in her hand. No more than she's out the door, in pops the old man.

Wednesday, just the same. Blows in, spears a half a headcheese on the end of her parasol. Slings a sling of baloney sausages around her neck like it's a silver fox fur, and struts out with a grin. In pops the old man. It's getting to be a legitimate racket.

Thursday, four gherkins and a matzos herring. Friday, one turkey leg, 22 slices of corn beef that Mrs. Fink sent back, and two chicken livers in her vanity case.

Saturday, she smuggles a ham out, in her Boston bag. In pops the old man. Sh, pipe down. Here she comes now. Wait till I plant a couple of jars of the bum caviar around that nobody buys. Now just make out your catching flies. Good morning Mrs. Fish .....

DAVE—Did ya folly that. She musta been in rare form to-day.

MIKE—Well, I kept track of the two pumpernickles and the cold roast turkey.

DAVE—From where I was watching, I saw her snag four cartons of eggs, and a tray of chopped chicken livers. Boy, this sure looks like good business today.

MIKE—Well, I don't see her old man popping in yet?

DAVE—He'll be here any second. It's in the bag, don't worry. Pipe down, here comes the dame back again, with a suitcase.

DAVE—Cripes, did you see that. Boy, I'll be able to retire.

MIKE—Four jars of preserved peaches, two pounds of butter, a roast beef.

DAVE—Three whole tongues, two sturgeons, two cans of anchovy paste.

MIKE—Well, where is her old man?

DAVE—Gosh, they must be throwing a party. Boy, I wish they throw parties every day. Well, I guess the old man will be dropping in any second now.

MIKE—So long, Dave. I'll see you around four o'clock.

MIKE—Hello, Dave. Holy smokes. What are you doing, auctioneering the place off. Say did the old guy show up.

DAVE—No, but the dame came back again. With a Saratoga trunk this time. Maybe the guy is laid up.

4:15 P. M.—He mighta been called out of town.

4:30 P. M.—Maybe he is busy home, helping to fix up for the party.

4:45 P. M.—He always pops right in.

4:50 P. M.—Maybe I better give the bloke a buzz. Where's his card. Oh yes, Mr. Fish, Atwater OOOO. Hello, Atwater OOOO? Mr. Fish please.

VOICE—Quit your kiddin.

DAVE—Whose this?

VOICE—This is Yates' sea food market, and you want Mr. Fish. Your a little early with that stuff, buddy.

DAVE—Hey Yates, what's the racket here. This is Dave. I'm looking for a guy with a high hat, white mustache, trick vest, green spats and a southern drawl.

YATES—Did he say his wife was a kelptomaniac.

DAVE—Yes, yes, that's the guy.

YATES—Well, we're looking for him, too.

The Saga of Rufftown

By Arthur "Bugs" Baer

One of Those Old Home Bouts

DEAR SYRUP:

You are insulting the name of fair womanhood by putting before the public a creature by the name of Stale Annie, whom, to me, is the eptomister of inaggleous perookaber. I know deep in my shallow heart there was never a person by the name of Stale Annie.

Is she a figamous of your erratible brain? Did she exist? Or was she just a phantastarine of the orkastober lunk?

Hoping that you will clear up this matter, I remain, a defender of womankind,

ELOISE GOOPIE.

NOW, there's the kind of letters we like to get. It shows that deep in the heart of every oil well there is some phoney stock.

Stale Anne was the belle of Rufftown.

She believed in woman's rights.

She could also hook with her left.

The Glutt fell in love with Annie and proposed to her in the accepted style.

That was when the referee disqualified Annie for slugging The Glutt when he was on one knee.

Annie didn't know it was a proposal of marriage. She was hoping it was a challenge.

Was Annie strong? Her biceps were terrific. She could pull a thimble down over her ears.

We will palpitate a little from the classical dribble to drop a few snertty remarks about the characters who have gummed up the details. Annie was a nice girl, but went to the wrong college. She had won a scholarship from a jury in fair competition with all the population of Rufftown.

Annie's room in her first college was really a breakfast nook.

She also ate dinner and supper there. The door was lattice work and very romantic. It had been made by the Heliotrope Steel Works of Hunksdork, Ariz.

The dean of the college had a son who was so bright his face looked like a lamp wick.

This was The Glutt. He wanted to marry Annie the first time he almost met her.

Annie reciprocated his young afflictions. She said, "Get a saw and we will both graduate from college together."

Which was how Annie happened to be in The Glutt's corner the night The Glutt fought Bumpty Oats.

The shack was crowded. It really was a family fight.

The first three rounds he was feeling his way around the canvas. Sometimes with his nose.

Bumpty was just as fast. They were like two humming birds. The only difference is that a humming bird jabs a flower once in a while.

Finally, Bumpty got his gestures mixed with his elocution and down went The Glutt.

The referee refused to clock the usual 10 over The Glutt. He was smart. If he had ever let Rufftown know that he was educated up to 10 they would have revoked his franchise.

Tears were streaming down the referee's face as he bent over in a body and said:

"Glutt, I can't count those fatal 10 over you."

The Glutt said, "Fatal? Why, it's delicious."

The Glutt always made everybody feel at home even if he didn't belong there himself.

Roping the News

with Will Rogers

WELL ALL I KNOW is just what I read in the Papers. Of course the most assuring news of the past couple of weeks was the adjourning of Congress. That wasent only news, that was an achievement.

It looked for awhile there that the Boys were going to be on our hands from now on. They sure did get rid of a batch of dough, the most money ever appropriated by any Congress, not even excepting war times. All we have to do is make it for em and they sure do distribute it.

Of course as usual in the last minutes of Congress why they dident pass any of the bills that they should have passed, and did pass all that they shouldent.

NOW take the Lame Duck Bill, that the one where they want to do away with electing a man one year and have him seated on his first Grandchild's Birthday.

Senator Norris had a mighty good Bill in there to do away with that very Lame Duck term. Well the House voted it, and the Senate voted it, but one made a slight change from what the other had passed, so that meant that it had to go to what is called conference (thats one of the things that Golf Players are always in when you go to their office).

Well do you know as bad as the country wanted this Bill passed so that Congress would meet on the fourth of January, instead of waiting till the fourth of December, and the President was to be inaugurated on January the 14th, just a little over two months after he had been elected, that would have done away with the plan of what to do with our presidents after the time they are elected and before they are seated.

YOU SEE its awful embarrassing the way it is, the President that is in kinder feels like a has been, after they have elected some one else. So That was all remedied, and then they go into this Huddle in Conference and they dont get it threshed out in time to get it passed. There was dozens of em like that. But it was such a relief to get em away that we all felt mighty grateful.

EVERYBODY says that things are kinder picking up, but you ask the fellow Do you mean that you are doing better, and he will say, "No, personally I am not, but everyone I meet seems to have a little better feeling about everything. But you just cant find the fellow that is doing better.

"Sometimes I think we are just talking better, we aint doing any better. But we dont have to do better. We can just keep on doing as well as we can and still be O. K. Thats because we are getting used to it. Its knocked some of those big schemes out of us that we all used to bore everybody with."

WELL LETS SEE what else has been agitating the Natives here lately. Soldiers are getting their insurance money. Course it is fine to get it, the only thing is, how do you know there wont be a time later on when you will need it worse than you do now. You know we are never as bad off as we are liable to get.

Along about 1945 when that would be coming due in full, you would just be that much older, and less able to be working. But every fellow has got to figure his own case out his own way. But I hope none of them are led on by a lot of friends that just want to see em have the money now because it is there for em.

We would all like to take our Insurance money and spend it, and its mighty hard not too, but we got to figure that later on it will come in handier than even now.

I WAS GLAD to see Smedley Butler get out of his case as he did. You know that fellow just belongs in a war all the time. He dont belong in Peace time. He is what I would call a natural born Warrior. He will fight anybody, anytime. But he just cant distinguish Peace from war.

He carries every medal we ever gave out. He has two Congressional Medals of Honor, the only man that ever got em a double header. You give him another war and he will get him another one. I dont know him, never met him. But I do admire him. He is a mighty useful man in a war, and as we are always having em why I consider him a very valuable man.

We are liable to scare him up something before long. We are looking around now to see where we can get in one worth while some place. Even our Scouts for the Marines are having trouble locating places for them to go, this is about the first time that they havent been employed. We are even getting tired of continually fighting with Nicaraguans. We always have to take them on when there is no bigger bait. But I see where we are supposed to come out of there.

WHAT OTHER SCANDAL we got? Oh yes Aimee's daughter married the Purser on the boat that they went to the Orient on. I kinder thought Aimee would grab off that Captain, but she dident.

Right here under our nose at the Old Soldiers Home, in Sawtelle, they had forty hit by that "Jake" paralysis, thats the diease that originally started in Oklahima, and was incidentally cured or helped at Claremore, by the Radium Baths. Where is our laws in these Drug Stores that they let em sell stuff like that?

We sure do miss Mr. Einstein out here. He was supposed to come here for a rest and wanted to be let alone. Why my goodness, he just went out of his way to find something to go to, and Pictures? Why he would go searching for a Camera man if none was around. He sure did make himself a good fellow He seemed to be a mighty pleasant little fellow.

THIS WRITING is going to be mighty tough with no Congress to pick on. I joke about em, but you know at heart I really like the Rascals. They are all right. If one wants to do right, our political system is so arranged that he cant do it. The minute one wants to do what no one else has been accustomed to do, why they call him an Anarchist.

Some of the old timers stepped out at the close of this one and that was kinder sad in a way. It must be a mighty fascinating game on those old fellows and its tough to have to bow out of the picture, and mighty few retire rich, so there must be a lot more honesty among them than we give them credit for. Well so long lets see what the new week brings forth.

AGREEMENT RECONCILES CLASHING CONTENTIONS

Mutual Concessions of Both Nations in Warship Strength Substantial, Says Statesman, Who Hopes for Further Gross Tonnage Cut

By PAUL PAINLEVE

Former Premier and War Minister of France.

PARIS, March 14.

THE national defense of a country forms a whole. Land, sea and air forces must co-operate harmoniously to insure maximum productiveness in men, material and money.

PAUL PAINLEVE
Former French Premier, Discusses Navies.

France's hypothesis, which affirms the interdependence of those three modes of armament, is therefore logically indisputable.

But when one embraces such a tremendous whole at one time, it is the navy which lends itself most readily to precise, rational conventions and loyal and undisputed execution.

It was fairly natural, therefore, that limitation of armaments should have been attempted first on the fleets. If this attempt proved abortive, such a defeat in this most favorable domain would have made the outlook for the issue at the great disarmament conference in the coming year singularly pessimistic.

If, on the contrary, it led to positive results, it would mean the first decisive step toward "organized" peace—always with the understanding that sight had not been lost subsequently of the "interpendence" of the three armaments, the particular terms exacted by security of the various countries, and the need for each of them to adapt other elements of their national defense to their new naval statute.

London Parley
Question of Naval Parity An Obstacle

Between the United States, England and Japan the negotiations in London, as everyone knows, met with complete success.

Between France and Italy, the negotiations broke on the famous question of naval parity. The principles at issue did not appear to allow any compromise.

This disagreement so prejudicial to the two countries concerned threatened also the three countries which had just come to terms, and an eventual renewal of the race for sea armament loomed.

Yesterday insoluble, this question appears today to be resolved. Why and how?

Before technical explanations, I feel it is necessary to insist on the consequences of general politics which, had they continued, would have entailed discord between the two Mediterranean countries.

The refusal of France and Italy to adhere to the London pact was not only progress deferred; it was a relapse into former bad ways. It was not only that the convention of London was rendered precarious. It was that the exasperated cause for conflict and all the friction between France and Italy had been aroused.

When three great nations of different race separated by oceans found a way of reconciling their rivalries, what an example was this obstinate refusal of two neighbor peoples to come to an understanding—peoples of the same culture who had just mingled their blood generously on the field of battle!

This growing strain between France and Italy gave real pain to all French statesmen who had witnessed the war.

To reconcile antagonistic claims, it was necessary to rise above strict calculations of caliber and tonnage and let oneself be guided through minute discussions by common aspiration to the same end: cordial reconciliation of French and Italian opinion.

Therefore, as the Corriere de la Serra said on March 3, it was on a political basis that the technical discussions, if they were to lead to anything, must be pursued. But there are positive data to abolish which mere good will is not enough.

Objected
France Agreed Only on Ships of Line

Before the war in 1914, the total tonnage of the Italian fleet (686,812 tons), as also the number of ships of the line in service or construction (15 vessels representing 236,500 tons) were hardly more than half the corresponding and characteristic figures of the French fleet.

After 1914, France, in relinquishing construction of six dreadnaughts of 24,830 tons each, had realized spontaneously a notable reduction in her naval armaments.

What new reductions did the Washington Conference bring?

The original English project proposed to divide the five great navies into three classes and to place the French and Italian navies, which would be put on the same level for all categories of ships, side by side in the third class. This level corresponding to a navy whose tonnage should be three-tenths of the English or American navy.

Italy made no objection to this project on the principle which agreed with her essential claim, namely: parity with other Continental powers.

France declared she could accept the Anglo-Saxon proposals only for ships of the line and airplane carriers (though this would be for her a sacrifice to the cause of peace) but she held herself completely at liberty for all other categories of ships, not by reason of imperialism but in virtue of national needs.

These needs Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald himself, in May, 1930, recognized as "the precondition at the basis of every agreement," and summed up thus:

"France has a Mediterranean coast from which the Mediterranean sea route takes off; she has an Atlantic coast from which sea routes over the ocean take off.

"She is north of the Mediterranean and her North African possessions are south of that sea. Between the North African coast, its hinterland and populations on one side, and the southern coast of the home country on the other, there must be a bridge that no one can break.

Beyond the Suez Canal, French colonies extend to the east. France must be in a position to maintain contact with them."

Reductions
Proposed at Washington Favored by Italy

The treaty signed in 1922 at Washington established then in principle Franco-Italian parity, but only for a fleet of the line (ships of more than 10,000 tons). The intended division of future construction was to wipe out in some 10 years' time the superiority in tonnage which the French fleet of the line possessed.

Adopted without enthusiasm by the French Parliament, on the contrary it was received in Italy as a hope of complete parity in the near future, and was loyally acted upon. The French program, of new construction projected a total tonnage of 713,352 tons for 1936, i. e., a diminution of 35 per cent on that of 1914. In these circumstances, negotiations were opened in London in 1930.

America, Great Britain and Japan, agreeing on principles, came to terms without much difficulty on further reduced figures, but between Italy and France the arguments quoted in 1922 retained their full force. There was even an additional consideration of importance—the development of a German fleet.

However frightful the prospect of war may be and whatever the just horror it may arouse in leaders, it is nevertheless the duty of technicians to estimate, without optimism, the forces which might eventually oppose them, and estimate them at their military value.

Now, without mentioning small units, the German navy can, according to the Treaty of Versailles, launch eight vessels of 10,000 tons each,

RACKETEERING EXISTS THROUGH CUPIDITY OF POLITICIANS, HE SAYS

Urges Centralized Law-Enforcement Body, Organized and Trained On Military Lines And Commanded From Each State Capital, Superseding the Municipal Police Forces.

By MAJ. GEN. SMEDLEY D. BUTLER

United States Marine Corps, Formerly Director of Public Safety of Philadelphia.

A REAL DANGER to our institutions lies in the fact that as criminals and racketeers become more powerful, through their alliances with influential politicians and office-holders, law-abiding people eventually will lose confidence in our system of government and, in desperation, will seek other means of procuring for themselves the security and self-respect to which they have every right to feel entitled as citizens of a civilized country.

I do not say that all politicians are financially dishonest and that their connections with gangs of terrorizing racketeers, bootleggers, crooks, gamblers and others of the underworld are primarily for the purpose of increasing their bank accounts.

Nevertheless, political expediency always is considered paramount by most local politicians, and, except during those periods when the people are aroused, individual public safety is a matter of no concern to them.

In normal times the whole question of municipal public safety is viewed from a political angle. There is but little difference, as far as the general welfare of the public is concerned, between political gangs and the racketeering gangs, except that the latter wear no disguises.

Seriousness
Of Situation Being Realized by People

Racketeering is a parasite on the political machinery and exists only through the cupidity of political leaders in the various communities. Our people are beginning to realize this, and in their helplessness—due to lack of cohesion and fear of personal consequences—are simply drifting and watching.

The danger is that to throw off this yoke of political hypocrisy they may feel it necessary to make changes in the established order of things—and not stop at persons.

Certainly the average citizen will not go on forever helplessly standing by and watching farcical attempts at maintaining the safety of our people and the dignity of our institutions.

It is unlikely that the voters ever will calmly organize against these conditions and retain in office the straight-shooting men necessary to clean up a crime-ridden community and keep it clean. They may elect a few such officials, but generally even this much of the effort will be engineered by the political gang itself to quiet the uproar.

These men, of course, will be helpless, for the key positions still will be held by the gang.

It is more likely that, in sorely troubled spots—such as some of our largest cities—with public officials seemingly working with the chieftains of the various rackets, vigilance committees will take the law into their own hands — with results disastrous to the community.

It may be necessary to police certain cities and sections of this country with Federal troops — such things have been done—but it will not be a permanent cure. Except in extreme cases, this step is highly undesirable.

The only solution, it seems to me, is for the people to get genuinely aroused and stay aroused until their chosen representatives do their duty. Until then there will be no real, lasting change for the better in the daily battle with the underworld.

Where should the start be made once a community is aroused? Ask a police official anywhere or a student of law enforcement why ours is a crime-ridden nation. Their answers invariably run something like this:

Laws are lax and inadequate. Court procedure is slow — painfully slow — antiquated and riddled with too many legal loopholes through which criminals are permitted to slip to freedom with the aid of unscrupulous and politically active criminal lawyers.

Judges-Juries
Believe Criminals, Turn Deaf Ear to Police

Judges and juries are too prone to believe criminals and to disbelieve the police.

District attorneys will not give the time and effort to "work up" cases.

Magistrates and justices of the peace are incompetent, generally politically controlled, and too often grafters.

Well, let's grant that these are correct, at least to some extent. From my own knowledge during two years as Director of Public Safety in Philadelphia, I know that only too frequently they are true.

I could cite numerous examples to bear out my contention, but they would be beside the point. For the moment we will grant that these faults contribute considerably to our growing crime bill, now generally estimated by those who should know at about ten billion dollars a year.

Let's admit all these things, but let us not forget that these agencies—magistrates, district attorneys, judges and juries—have to do only with the punishment of criminals. They do not have to do with the apprehension of criminals nor with the activities of racketeering gangs; they do not have to do with the gathering of evidence against those they apprehend.

System
Even More Incompetent Than Personnel

Who has to do with that? The police forces of the nation. And there, to my mind, lies the real reason for our nation's ever-mounting crime bill—now about $400 a family each year.

What's wrong with our police forces and the police systems?

"Everything!" seems to be the only answer—an answer based on personal experience, plus observation and fre-

BENITO MUSSOLINI PREDICTED:

'I Shall Make My Mark This Epoch, For I Have the Will and the Desire'

Duce Glimpsed Greatness Thirty Years Ago, His Biographer Reveals

By MARGHERITA SARFATTI

Author of "The Life of Benito Mussolini."

SYMBOL OF FAME—Long before he had attained world-wide eminence, Benito Mussolini declared that "in 30 years, perhaps some one will put a bust of me in a park." Even today his prophecy is more than realized, and there are many busts of him in Italy. Above is the model for one of them.

"IF EVERYTHING goes well," said Mussolini one day at the beginning of his government, "in 30 years perhaps someone will put a bust of me in a park somewhere, to serve as a place for nurses or maids to meet their sweethearts. 'Behind Mussolini's bust, at eight,' they will say. Great satisfaction for me, that!

"What have I done up to now?" he asked, half to himself. After a pause, "Nothing! I am a newspaperman and a member of the Cabinet, like so many others." His discontent showed itself a little more strongly.

"What our people need is order. And order I shall give them." Then followed another silence, at last broken by: "Yes! I shall make a mark in my epoch, for I have the will and the desire. I shall be something more than these others."

And Mussolini has already made his "mark." Why? Because bigness of ideals, ambition for a fame founded on big things, insensibility for and lack of interest in little things, in secondary roles, form the dominant note in the character of Mussolini. And this character of his is aided by a sort of terrestrial asceticism, of a disposition unconditionally determined to get what he is after, at any cost.

Comradeship
Rather Than Friendship His Social Impulse

The material that feeds his imagination is the multitude, his connection with the world is in dialogue with the people, his exercise of power over the imagination of the public. His nature is, above all, a political nature.

His artistic tendencies are toward architecture, toward the theater and toward music, which impress the spirit of the multitudes. He is especially fond of history, which seems to him like a condensation of politics.

In Mussolini, intimate and personal sentiments are not to be found, such as friendship. When he is out of sorts he says something like this: "If God Himself began to be 'friendly' with me, I should begin to distrust Him."

Mussolini understands a comrade, not a friend. He feels the relationship which is born of common action, the sympathy which binds men in action. He knows how to make others like and admire him.

But even this human side of Mussolini is entirely of a political nature. The curriculum vitae for him does not enter into the account of the work which men must carry on, for great mechanics pay attention only to the functioning of the great machine. If, among a thousand cogs in an imaginary wheel, one cog engages better than the others, the Duce takes note of it immediately.

Man, however, is an ill-made cog, liable to unforeseen and unthought-of defects. So, in the economics of his activity, Mussolini believes error unavoidable. Because life is a poor thing, one cannot expect to find men of first class that do not exist. It is necessary to take what there is, resigned to the fate of finding it inferior to what is needed.

Mussolini is anything but an optimist. He is a skeptic, ironic but tolerant. And he knows how to be true. He does not change, he does not forget, and, as the years and their events pass, he knows how to keep gratitude, even for little things, as one keeps rose-leaves for perfume.

Temperament
Of the Man Reflects His Career as Publicist

Individualistic and uninclined to sociability by nature, Mussolini has developed and educated this instinct for recognition as an arm for defense. For this reason he appears solitary.

Mussolini's formula for an ideal retreat is: "An elegant, distinguished place, but not crowded with people." The ideal party for him is composed of four, at the most, because if there are more it becomes a crowd.

"Don't make me think I'm in a refectory!" he says, if he is invited to a dinner where there are to be many guests. And when, on an exceptional occasion, in the Popolo d'Italia offices, he accepted a glass of wine, Mussolini only took a little sip from the glass on the table, alone, after everyone had left he took it in a swallow.

To understand the Mussolini of today, Mussolini, Prime Minister of Italy, head of the government, it is necessary to know Mussolini, journalist, Mussolini, socialist.

"Journalism," says this journalist now completely separated from his calling, "has formed my character. Journalism has taught me to know with what human material politics is made."

Journalism has been the gymnasium for the development of Mussolini's personality. It has created the necessary atmosphere about him, has worked the first revolutions in him.

Journalism has destroyed in him, along with so many sweet-scented reservations, the idea of old-school diplomacy, intrigues murmured behind a fan. The clearness of the true politician of today responds to direct frank tactics in true diplomacy. To say out clearly what others mumble. And if one really wishes that the things that one says be not repeated, then the best way is not to tell them to anyone.

The spirit of these new politics corresponds precisely to Mussolini's temperament, and he has formed and strengthened it in his career as journalist and socialist.

No Sentiment
Almost Had Sorel's Idea Of Violence

I met Mussolini in 1912, when he was called to the editorial chair of the Avanti, the great Italian socialist paper. And what led Mussolini to the editorship of this most important organ of the Italian socialist press was his victory over the moderate elements in the 1912 Socialist Congress.

Even as a youth, Mussolini never had any sympathy for moderate tendencies, any more than he had faith in electoral campaigns, or in universal suffrage, all of which he considered as sort of oratorical schools wherein fatuous and ambitious men were prepared for a "political career."

He was against sentimental socialism. A disciple of Nietzsche, he almost had Sorel's political idea of violence. His ideas, set forth with impressive violence, let loose bedlam itself in the Socialist Congress, splitting the Italian Socialist party neatly in two.

And it was in consequence of his firm stand that Mussolini was offered the longed-for post of director of the Avanti. From that moment he established himself in Milan. And at that moment I met Mussolini, for I was then one of the associate editors of the socialist daily.

Flaming Eyes
Denouncing Age of Chatter and Vain Projects

At that time Mussolini was of the lean type of northern Italians, toughened by centuries of hard fighting against rebellious soil.

According to the usage of republicans from that part of Italy, which is called "Romagna," and from which he came, Mussolini wore a loose, black jacket, a broad-brimmed black hat, and that particular type of dark, loose, bow tie which is usually called "artists."

Nevertheless he maintained a dignified air, vital self-control, and a certain sense of disdainful aloofness. Even his mouth, so clean-cut, sometimes contracted in a disdainful expression.

Above all, he had magnetic eyes; large, black, brilliant, with great pupils, yet capable of contracting to the extent of seeming the point of a pin, with whites that were almost blue.

As the eyes of the Florentine monk who had denounced the easy-going and pagan tendencies of his time were full of flame, so the eyes of Mussolini seemed full of flame, sounding the alarm, denouncing our easy-going attitude, our age of chatter and vain projects.

Thirty years have not yet passed since Mussolini made the remarks with which I began. Busts of Mussolini in parks for maids and nurses to use for appointment places are not common. Yet Mussolini has made the mark on his epoch which he desired to make.

GEN. SMEDLEY BUTLER WARNS:

Terrorizing Racketeers Flourishing Through Alliances With Politicians

Urges State-Controlled Police To Supersede Municipal Law-Enforcement Groups

quent discussion with all manner of law enforcement officials. The personnels are wrong, the systems are wrong.

Everything considered, the police of most of our metropolitan areas do well—but not well enough.

In our smaller cities, our towns and villages, the police are all but worthless. They seem to know nothing, see nothing, hear nothing and do nothing.

And, incompetent and useless as the personnel is, the system under which it is enrolled and under which it works is even worse. No police force can function properly unless its members feel officially safe—that is, feel that a proper performance of duty will insure them continuance of their work and income, and will not result in dismissal or punishment intended to force their resignation.

Police, to be really efficient—and not just ornaments and human traffic signals—must be free from political and other subversive influences. It is doubtful, if, under present municipal conditions, this can be brought about.

The average policeman will stay straight if he knows that those of equal or higher rank in the political machine are on the level. But he is only human and must live; he will generally drift with the crowd which follows the political bosses.

Then, too, there is a lack of proper co-operation and coordination among police forces in the same state, not to mention the almost criminal lack of national co-operation.

Furthermore, except in large cities, the police are not properly equipped with knowledge or tools to fight the every-day battles with criminals who know only too well the use of modern methods and weapons. For police to work efficiently, effectively and impartially, a new system is required.

The system I have in mind, and about which I have thought ever since I became a "cop" in Philadelphia in 1924, would, I believe, reduce crime to a minimum.

Crime cannot be abolished, probably not even in Utopia, but it can be reduced, and reduced tremendously, and kept down by efficient police, honestly and ably directed.

Real Issue
A Mobile Gendarmerie Vs. Political Influence

I believe that a single, state-controlled police force in every one of our 48 states, organized and trained somewhat along military lines, modernly equipped and ably commanded, would provide the answer to the pressing question of crime reduction.

Such a system would involve elimination of the hundreds of municipally-directed police forces in every state and the substitution of a single unit not radically different from the state police forces of New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey and other commonwealths.

A single police force, composed of young and unmarried men enlisted for four-year terms, into which could be instilled a proper spirit and morale, and which would be free from political meddling by virtue of state-wide scope and single control by a police commissioner appointed from non-political ranks for ten years or longer, could easily do better work than the present police forces.

Such a unit, subject only to the orders of its superiors, with its members constantly shifted from one part of the state to another, would be augmented by two stationary divisions of the force—a detective division and a motorized, bandit-chasing division.

Teletype
Machines Would Connect All Stations

The detective division, with its trained thief catchers and crime investigators, would have its headquarters at the state capital, with stations in all parts of the state. The members of this division would continue on permanent assignments—not subject to regular shifting.

The motorized division, also, would continue in the same localities for long periods, being shifted only to meet emergencies.

All the station houses in the state, probably exceeding a thousand in large states, would be directly connected with the police headquarters by electric teletype machines, and as soon as a crime was committed in any section, a report would be teletyped to every station and immediately relayed to the members of the force.

I realize that the single police unit will be continued as long as possible by politicians whose power and prestige rest on their domination over police forces. I am convinced, nevertheless, that such a new system is required.

In large cities policemen are paid from $150 to more than $200 a month. For $100 a month we could get a fine type of young man. They would not be permitted to marry, although commissioned and non-commissioned officers would have that right. That would be an inducement to those who desired to settle down.

These men, recruited from every section of the state, after proper drilling, training and schooling for police work, would be formed into companies and sent out for street work in the various communities. House sergeants and some other non-commissioned officers would be retained in the station houses for permanent duty, but not the men on actual street duty.

Men never would be assigned to work in their home towns or districts—a rule which should make better policemen of them and remove the temptation to serve friends.

No politician could dominate such a body of men. First, the men could not be dependent upon any politician for their jobs. Second, what power does any one small town leader or ward politician have in state politics? And even if a politician did succeed in getting some power over a unit assigned to his city or district, that unit could be shifted immediately to a far corner of the state for duty.

A proper spirit could be developed in such a body, and no police force can be 100 per cent efficient without morale. If one unit fell down on an assigned task, another unit would replace it and we would then have some competition that would prove helpful.

With four-year enlistment it would be possible to weed out each term those who had proved undesirable, and to get new and younger men. In this way, any time a policeman became inefficient he could be let out.

If a crime outbreak swept over one section of a state, men could quickly be concentrated at such a point to battle the criminals by a plan of "moving up," similar to that used by fire departments in fighting a multiple-alarm blaze, when engine companies move into fire houses nearer the scene, relieving those called out.

Painleve Appraises French-Italian Naval Agreement

armed with guns of 280 mm., and eight cruisers of 6,000 tons each.

German industry has turned this meager tonnage to remarkable account. Her eight vessels are in reality 29-knot cruisers. In their power and artillery, they exceed the 10,000 ton cruisers for which the Washington Treaty fixed 203 mm. as the maximum gun caliber.

The German fleet would thus in effect consist of 16 cruisers (8 of 10,000 tons and 8 of 6,000 tons) suited to make war on maritime lines of communications, and distrating all other ships of the same tonnage of other nations.

But the German and Italian doctrines of naval warfare are very different. The former sacrifices speed to armament, scope of action and to protection. A speed of 29 knots is sufficient for it.

Italy desires speed before all else—speed of between 35 and 40 knots. Equal in number and tonnage, the fleet which had the qualities of the Italian fleet would not possess the qualities of scope of action and fighting of the German cruisers. If it answered to the German qualities, its speed would be too inferior to that of the Italian ships.

It is evident merely from the technical point of view how delicate and redoubtable a task the building of the French navy was. The effort of good will which was necessary to surmount the obstacle separating the Italian and French theses may be imagined.

Negotiations are not quite complete, but indications which have already been furnished give some idea of their broad outlines.

The mutual concessions of the two countries are substantial. The Roman press points out that those of Italy diminish somewhat when one goes to the bottom of the matter.

In total tonnage, the margin between the two navies before the London Conference exceeded 260,000 tons. It would be reduced to 230,000 in 1936—reduced, that is, by only 50,000 tons.

But if the age of ships is taken into account, this margin would be in part more apparent than real.

It is calculated on the supposition that eight French dreadnaughts or cruisers, and four Italian cruisers will be kept in service—vessels which will have passed the age limit before the end of 1936. If they are purely and simply derated, then it is not at 230,000 tons but at about 120,000 tons that the difference between the two tonnages should be rated.

When official figures and details are known, it will be well to examine them minutely; not, indeed, with a hidden plan of chicanery and recrimination, but in the same spirit which has presided at the negotiations.

One article of the agreement specifies, it is said, that tonnage of ships of the line should not exceed 25,000 tons and the caliber of their guns shall not exceed 305 mm.

Could not France and Italy come to a friendly agreement and go still further in the reduction of gross tonnage? Would not this be the best preparation for the great international controversy slated for Geneva in 1932?

Other nations are indeed wrong in seeming alarmed at the recent agreement. Only those whose intentions are obscure have a reason to be uneasy.

Wilkins-Ellsworth Expedition to Trace Course of Gulf Stream Under Polar Ice

Studies of Subsea Currents May Help Solve World Weather Problems

By PROF. HARALD U. SVERDRUP

Chief of the Scientific Staff of the Wilkins-Ellsworth Trans-Arctic Submarine Expedition.

SCIENTIST—Prof. Harald U. Sverdrup, who will study Polar currents with the Wilkins-Ellsworth Submarine Arctic Expedition this summer.

A PERFECTLY NATURAL attitude toward scientific work in polar regions often is expressed with the question:

"What can we gain by the accumulation of knowledge from the remotest parts of the globe?"

Arctic exploration follows the twofold aims of scientific research. We want to know the polar regions as accurately as we know any other part of the earth.

We are in closer every day contact with the Arctic than is realized generally. To draw attention to problems, which for a complete study require observations from the Arctic, I have only to mention: "Cold waves" in the central states, weather forecasting, ocean currents and weather changes, ocean currents and yield of fisheries, magnetic storms, aurora and radio reception.

I wish to emphasize that the Wilkins-Ellsworth submarine expedition must not be looked upon as an isolated phenomenon.

Oceanography
Of the Polar Basin to Be Specially Studied

It is, from the standpoint of the scientist, only one of the series of expeditions necessary for the systematic exploration of the Arctic.

Other expeditions have drifted with the ice and been carried helplessly along, or they have toiled over the ice under conditions which did not permit them to transport scientific instruments other than those for navigational purposes, but the submarine expedition can select its own route and carry the best of existing scientific equipment.

The expedition will render a valuable contribution to our knowledge of the geography of the Polar Basin.

It is now possible by means of the sonic depth finder (commonly called the echo sounder) to obtain soundings at short intervals along any route, and the submarine is to be equipped with the very best of these delicate instruments. We shall thus be able to obtain an accurate profile of the bottom, along our route. Any possible submarine ridges will not escape detection.

We do not yet know the shape of the polar basin and we do not know the extent of the deep basin. The submarine expedition may increase our knowledge in this respect.

Information as to the shape and the extent of the basin is indispensable to the study of ocean currents, a knowledge of which is necessary for the solution of many problems of economic importance. Thus one may see that the geographic questions are vitally connected with practical problems.

Another series of measurements will be of great interest in the study of the exact form of the earth and the equilibrium of the earth's crust. I refer to the measurements of the acceleration of gravity.

The force of gravity changes with the geographic latitude, being small at the equator and great at the poles. An intimate knowledge of this change is indispensable for the determination of the exact form of the earth and also has important bearing on questions dealing with the constitution of the earth's crust.

During the submarine expedition it will be possible, first, to obtain observations at the North Pole in this respect; second, to make observations under very favorable conditions over a deep sea between two great continents. The scientists who are studying these problems, therefore, take a special interest in this part of the scientific program.

Subsea Drifts
Cold Current Flows Out As Gulf Stream Enters

The oceanographic observations which can be taken during the crossing of the polar sea have immediate bearing on practical problems, because of the exchange of water which takes place between the Atlantic and the polar sea through the broad gateway between Spitzbergen and Greenland. The other openings into the polar sea are of minor importance in the study of currents because they are narrow and shallow.

It is well known that the Gulf stream crosses the Atlantic Ocean—not as a very marked current, but as "The Atlantic Drift"—passes north of Great Britain, enters the Norwegian Sea and follows the Norwegian coast as far as latitude 72 degrees north. Thanks to this enormous transport of water of relatively high temperature, barley and potatoes can be grown as far north as the seventy-first parallel.

It is perhaps not so well known that the Gulf Stream, when leaving the Norwegian coast, divides in several branches, the most important of which reaches Spitzbergen and brings a comparatively mild climate even to this group of islands in latitude 76 to 81 degrees north.

This branch of the Gulf Stream continues directly into the polar sea, where Nansen, during the drift of the Fram, could trace it as a sub-surface current 1,000 miles from Spitzbergen.

Since a great volume of water is streaming into the polar sea, a corresponding volume must flow out. The outflowing volume, in fact, must be greater than the inflowing, because the big Siberian rivers are pouring enormous masses of fresh water into this sea.

Much of the outflow takes place through the Spitzbergen-Greenland opening. The cold current along the coast of Greenland carries water which has only a small content of salt, because it has been mixed with the fresh water from the Siberian rivers.

The Greenland current bends around the southern point of Greenland into Baffin Bay and leaves this bay again along the coast of Labrador, meeting the Gulf Stream south of the Grand Banks of Newfoundland. It has been "strengthened" in different ways, but part of the water around the Grand Banks of Newfoundland has been cooled off in the polar sea.

Weather
May Be Affected by Actions of Currents

Thus there exists an intimate connection between the currents right off the American coast and the currents in the polar sea. One may even claim that the study of the polar sea is essential to "home problems," such as weather forecasting.

What can we expect to accomplish in this field? We can obtain a picture showing the intensity of the submerged branch of the Gulf Stream and probably giving information as to the region where the salty water of the Atlantic mixes with the much fresher polar water.

We can select our route with these two definite objects in view, because we are free to go where we desire and are independent of the surface drift of the ice.

When it comes to the study of the polar sea, the Wilkins-Ellsworth expedition is a pioneer. If it is successful, it undoubtedly will be followed by similar expeditions which will examine details.

But we shall not confine ourselves to a study of the physical conditions of the sea. The question of life and conditions for life in the sea is one of equal importance and we shall, therefore, give this considerable attention.

This question is of interest because very divergent opinions have been set forth. Some explorers claim that life is equally abundant all over the polar sea; others maintain that conditions for life are favorable only in the vicinity of the coasts.

We shall be able to collect samples of the small plant and animal organisms which form the food for the larger organisms and thus at least ascertain whether or not the sea contains food.

Pioneer Effort
Other Groups Expected To Continue Studies

We shall also examine the quantities of the "fertilizers of the sea"—substances essential to the development of even the smallest organisms. There are reasons to believe that Arctic waters are especially rich in such substances. We shall seek definite information on this and thus help clarify questions which long have been discussed among scientists.

A study of the deposits on the bottom of the Arctic Ocean should yield information of great importance on the recent life history of the earth. These deposits probably form very slowly. A core may represent a long period of time.

We hope to obtain such cores, two or three feet long, by using special devices. We also hope to obtain larger samples from the surface of the bottom. These may bring information about organisms living in the depths of the Arctic waters.

Finally we shall be able to give a comprehensive account of the character of the Arctic ice in summer. We shall obtain views of the ice along a stretch of 2,200 miles and by means of the special trolley-like guide arm which has been constructed to keep contact with the ice we shall be able to record the thickness and every irregularity of the ice on this long distance.

Much information is desired from the Arctic, and much useful work can be carried out on the submarine expedition.

Only a few of the problems to be studied can be called specifically Arctic; most of them are related to problems of general interest concerning the earth and many are closely connected to practical questions of daily life.

A COLD!

"FIGHTING" a cold is like Don Quixote's fighting the windmill!

Instead of battling a cold, soothe it away with the new "Pineoleum" oil spray treatment.

The sensible place to treat a cold is at the seat of the trouble—the passages of nose and throat. And the "Pineoleum" oil spray method clears the passages, soothes the angry membranes, and rids you instantly of that stuffed-up feeling. It bathes the inflamed membranes in a spreading, penetrating film of healing oil that protects the tissues and inhibits the growth of germs.

SOVIET FINANCE CHIEF SAYS:

Russia Needs American Technical Help On an Unprecedented Expanding Scale

Recognition of Soviets by U. S. Depends on Policy of Banks, His View

By PROF. ALBERT A. JOHNSON

Noted American Agricultural Expert, Who Has Just Returned From Russia After Consultations With Soviet Officials.

MONEY MASTER—As Commissar of Finance, S. T. Grinko (above) controls in large measure the foreign trade relations of Soviet Russia, which he discusses in the accompanying interview with Prof. Albert A. Johnson. Press Cliche Photo.

"RECOGNITION by the United States of the Soviet Union depends in no small degree upon the policy of American banks, whose influence on the policy of the American government is well known.

"For that reason references by American banks to reasons for non-recognition do not appear very convincing to us."

The speaker was S. T. Grinko, Commissar of Finance of the Soviet. We sat in his office, fully 40 by 60 feet in size, in the Narkomfin building, in Moscow.

In the room were many desks and cabinets and a long conference table, covered with green felt cloth. Also, new sights for me in the high offices of this capital, a grandfather's clock, a 15-inch electric fan, a gooseneck desk lamp. The row of three telephones was more commonplace, and during our talk the Commissar was constantly interrupted by telephone calls.

M. Grinko, who continued signing letters for a moment as I was ushered in, was dressed in a "western" suit, of herringbone figured cloth and wore a sweater jacket over soft shirt, and a heavy gray tie, tied loosely in a large knot such as Lenin wore. I noted three pictures of Lenin, one of Stalin, also pictures of other leaders on the walls.

I had asked about the relationship between American and Soviet banks.

Guarantees
Of Credit Underlie Every Deal, He Asserts

"These relations are entirely confined to the business deals we conclude," he said, "because our state bank has to guarantee the payments upon maturity of the obligations created by our economic organizations. Up to the present time there has not been any single instance in which obligations contracted by our economic organs and guaranteed by our state bank have not been fully honored."

"What argument could I put forward in order to prove that credits may be safely granted to the U. S. S. R.?" I asked.

"First and foremost," he replied, "the tremendous prestige of the Soviet Union in world politics may be considered the best guarantee that agreements of every nature can be safely concluded with the Soviets.

"Second, the tremendous growth of our national economy may be considered another guarantee.

"Third, the movement of peasants into collectives, showing their profound confidence in the policy of the Soviet government, is a sound guarantee.

"Fourth, I would list the tremendous natural resources of our country, which are all state-owned.

"Finally, during a whole decade the Soviet has never failed to meet its various obligations."

Doors Opened
To America Because of Industrial System

Soviet leaders have contended that recognition would bring increased trade between America and the Soviet, and this at a time when America needs an increase in foreign trade.

"Recognition by Great Britain has not brought about an increase in trade," I said. "Some believe that recognition by America similarly would fail to increase trade. What is your opinion?"

"If recognition remains a mere formula and no active steps are taken to promote economic relations, such recognition will be of little use to us.

"Regarding Great Britain, recognition has strengthened our economic ties with that country, and our trade with England, even under present subnormal economic conditions, has expanded beyond what it was before the existence of such conditions.

"I would point out further that the British have not adopted the systems of mass production most suitable to meeting our needs, whereas American industries already had adopted the most modern standardization methods. That is why we are opening our doors wide to American products."

"Many persons in America are interested in knowing whether your gold stocks continue to increase," I said.

"The figures are published," the Commissar said, "but these facts should be emphasized: Both our gold mining industry and our relations with the world industrial organization are progressing at sufficiently rapid pace to create a perfectly sound basis for our international payments.

"Moreover, we have adopted a system of planned national economy. Tremendous material resources are handed over to the state—as are industries, transportation, agriculture, etc. The main part of our national income is produced by socialized effort. Under such conditions gold is deprived of some of the acute importance such as it has in capitalistic countries, and this is a fact to which bourgeois economists have not yet become accustomed."

I led the Commissar of Finance into a discussion of America and learned that he has a keen interest in our economic development, constantly studies us and our methods, said:

"Many of us believe we can learn a great deal from American technique, and are convinced that it will be of mutual benefit to both countries for us to avail ourselves of American technical help on a scale greater than ever in the gigantic construction work — unprecedented in world history—in which we are engaged under our Five Year Plan. American technical advance is very great, but it will continue expanding.

"I see America as a huge country, very similar to ours, but with more favorable climatic conditions.

"But I cannot help thinking that such a huge country, with all her tremendous technical possibilities, her enterprising people, is fettered by capitalism, which impedes her further progress. We consider that her economic crisis of today is a deep-rooted illness, caused by the very essence of capitalism."

Grinko turned again to his obvious disagreement with the American capitalistic organization when in discussing recognition he said:

"Already we have given ample and conclusive proof that we, on our part, are ready to promote in every conceivable way economic relations between the U. S. and the U. S. S. R. If the development of such economic relations is faced with obstacles on every side, this should be attributed to some of the American capitalistic circles, rather than to the U. S. S. R."

Health Questions Answered

By the Late Dr. Lewis Baker's Associates
An Advertisement Similar To This Has Been Appearing In Newspapers Throughout the Country, Regularly,
During the Past Twenty-One Years. Thousands Have Benefited By Adopting the Suggestions of An Experienced Conscientious Physician, Acquainted with the Real Needs of a Public Suffering from Minor Ailments

THE LATE DR. LEWIS BAKER

So many women ask concerning feminine hygiene that I am devoting a paragraph to all. I strongly disapprove of powerful caustics such as bichloride of mercury and irritants of the phenol or carbolic acid type. There is a most efficient alkaline antiseptic compound called Vilane Powder, which is non-caustic, and non-irritating, that I heartily recommend to any woman seeking a safe, sanitary means of maintaining cleanliness and health. A highly medicated product, proven useful in scores of common ailments. Each package (obtained of druggists) contains instructions complete for its use as a sanative douche and other purposes.

Mrs. T. A. B. asks: "I learned how good your medicines are by using Su-thol Tablets for headache and to check colds. Now I am writing to ask your advice regarding a rash and festering pimples which annoy me greatly."

Answer: Adopt Sulpherb Tablets as a laxative, blood-improving treatment. These tablets contain purified sulphur, cream of tartar, calcium and vegetable extracts, making it a very effective formula for pimples (acne), boils, carbuncles, etc.

K. B. A. asks: "I have many of the symptoms of anemia, such as low vitality, low blood pressure, weakness, paleness, and a general rundown, all-in feeling most of the time, and extremely nervous, too. Can you help me?"

Answer: The aid which nature needs is found in Cadomene Tablets, containing vital elements necessary to build up the blood and strengthen the nervous system.

R. E. F. asks: "Will you please suggest a cough remedy, free from opiates and chloroform, which can safely be used in treating the coughs and colds so prevalent with our whole family?"

Answer: Obtain of druggist 2½-oz. package of essence Mentho-Laxene, a concentrated medicine, which can be taken in pure form or diluted with home-made syrup or strained honey, to make a full pint. Full instructions and directions come with each package. There is nothing so good for children and adults.

K. S. A. asks: "I seem to have weak acting kidneys, as the flow is scant, but frequent and dark color, while I have backache and stiffness of joints and muscles with twinges of pain. Bladder irritation causes me to awaken several times each night."

Answer: Such conditions indicate the need of soothing, stimulating diuretic medicine. Obtain Balmwort Tablets and use as per directions on sealed package.

E. M. K. asks: "Can you advise a medicine suitable for helping a person suffering with muscular rheumatism?"

Answer: Benefit, often of a permanent character, is found by taking Cardiol Tablets, designed to aid elimination and neutralize the acids and poisons responsible. To relieve severe pain also take 5-grain Su-thol Tablets.

T. L. asks: "Advise a harmless laxative which can be used by both children and adults, and oblige."

Answer: Probably there is no finer laxative to be had than Casca-Royal Pills. Very effective and pleasant in relieving constipation.

B. T. R. asks: "Have had dyspepsia for over a year. Always after eating there is gas, belching and a sluggish, sleepy feeling, bloating and some pain in heart region."

Answer: Suggest a special formula treatment sold under the name of Triopeptine Tablets. Take as per directions for several weeks to get full benefits.

Answer to L. K. and others: For quick, harmless relief of headache or neuralgia the German-American remedy, five-grain Su-thol Tablets is unequaled. Full directions on package.

Answer to Miss C. C.: To overcome and banish perspiration odor, underarm odor, in a pleasant, harmless way, just begin using medicated CHEX Soap for toilet and bath. It cleanses, beautifies and deodorizes.

Answer to Miss B. R.: You are about 30 pounds under weight. Begin taking Hypo-Nuclane Tablets containing special ingredients designed to assist in putting on good solid flesh.

THANKFUL LETTERS

BROOKLYN, N. Y.—Mrs. B. Mueller, 756 Quincy St., writes: "I am so grateful for the help I received from taking Hypo-Nuclane Tablets that I have recommended them to several friends who had inquired what made such an improvement in my health. Had suffered for years with nervous indigestion. I gained 3 pounds in one week. In two months have gained 7 pounds, have a good appetite and sleep sound, which I had not done for five years. Feel strong and well and do all my work alone, etc."

• • •

HOLYOKE, MASS.—Dear Sirs: Nine years ago after the birth of baby girl I began to be bothered with stomach and intestinal trouble. I consulted physicians and they all gave me medicine, but I grew worse and worse until I was a nervous wreck. I had spells that I had to stay in bed three or four days. Then, reading your advertisement, I decided to try Casca Royal Pills, and the benefits are more than I can tell you. I feel that I owe you so much more than what I paid for your medicine. Yours truly, Signed: Mrs. Alice McLane.

P. S. Your Su-thol Tablets, too, are wonderful for pain relief.

CLEVELAND, OHIO—I have tried your cough syrup, Mentho-Laxene, and I find it the best I have ever used. I had a stubborn cough and bought a bottle of Mentho-Laxene and made the syrup. After taking only half the bottle the cough was gone and I haven't had a cough since. I have recommended it to all my friends. Signed: Mrs. Lillian Brown, 1213 Denison Ave.

STOTESBURY, MO.—I had a very severe case of Sciatic Rheumatism and Neuritis at the same time, and I sent to the Katz Drug Co. for Cardiol Tablets, Su-thol Tablets and Casca Royal Pills. Taking them as directed and I am now free from pain and suffering. That was five years ago. I never expected such results, and I am giving you permission to publish, for I certainly think your medicines are finest I ever tried. Respectfully. Signed, Mrs. Anna E Brown.

CHICAGO, ILL.—Dear Sirs: I have been a sufferer from nervousness and constipation for a very long time. I read some of the testimony in the Herald-Examiner advertisement and decided to give some of your remedies a trial. After using one box of Casca Royal Pills for constipation, I am greatly pleased. Am on my second box of Cadomene Tablets for nervousness and I sleep more soundly and am not so nervous as I was for a long time. Signed: Callie Copeland, 3406 State Street.

BIG HORN, WYOMING — Dear Sirs: I can truly say that I have tried many hair tonics and shampoos for itching scalp, dandruff and falling hair, that did me no good. One day, in a drug store, I saw CHEX Soap. I asked the druggist what it was good for. He said, "Fine for toilet and shampoo." I bought a cake and got relief from the first time I used it. You don't know how thankful I am for CHEX Soap. Signed: Mrs. Emma Dow.

REDDING, SHASTA CO., CALIF. —About one year ago I was mining in Quartz Mountain, Nevada, and I got completely run-down. Suffered with indigestion and constipation. I told my employer I would have to quit. He said, why don't you try Sulpherb Tablets for constipation and Cadomene Tablets to build up your strength? So I did and the result was wonderful. Have recommended to fellows that follow my mode of living and they got the same results. I cannot speak too highly of these medicines. Yours sincerely. Signed: William Finn.

Lafitte the Pirate, Cadillac the Hero, Emerge From Mists

ONE BY ONE the legendary figures of history are being dragged out of the shadows by the biographer. Not long ago we learned that Captain Kidd was only an amateur pirate, who got caught on his first raid, and otherwise was a most respectable citizen. Now Lyle Saxon puts another picturesque corsair into a book, but "Lafitte the Pirate" (published by Century) is more like the real thing—a sort of Capone of old New Orleans. He was a blacksmith by trade, a patriot by instinct, and the best copy for writers of romance that ever sailed under the Jolly Roger and brandished a cutlass.

George Seibel

There were two brothers, Pierre and Jean. They were slave-traders at first. The importation of slaves had been forbidden, and this led to racketeering like the prohibition of liquor over a century later. It was not possible to purchase slaves legally—the Lafittes had a private mart of their own.

South and west of New Orleans lay Barataria—islands, swamps, bayous, rivers—where Lafitte had as many as 1,000 men in his "gangs." He was a breaker of laws, but when the British wanted him to enlist against Andrew Jackson, he was an American first.

And so he gave Byron the inspiration for the poem of "The Corsair."

The Real Lafitte

Byron was not the only one inspired by these freebooters of the Spanish Main, and it must have been a heroic task for Lyle Saxon to discover the real Lafitte.

He has figured in scores of novels—"some of the writers have portrayed him as a fearless guiltless gentleman, a great lover, or a gay deceiver; others have made him a cowardly and bloodthirsty pirate."

People are still digging for his buried treasures.

Saxon follows Jean to the very end, when "he was morose and shabby, and, like so many other broken-hearted men, had grown fat." At last we can see this redoubtable cut-throat faithfully portrayed as a human being, not some fabulous hero or monster.

Rescue of Cadillac

Still another figure of our early annals is rescued from the fogs of tradition by Agnes C. Laut in her "Cadillac" (published by Bobbs-Merrill). As famous as Lafitte around the Gulf is Cadillac around the Great Lakes. The founder of Detroit was one of those "Cadets of Gascony" sung by Cyrano—and he gave 34 years of his life to the extension of France's colonial empire. He has told little about himself—"I am warrior, not writer," is sufficient excuse.

But Agnes C. Laut, the leading historian in Parkman's old field, has done just as heroic work in revealing this adventurous explorer, soldier and builder to the modern gaze.

"He was only one cog in the great cosmic wheel rolling life from slime to star; but he was one of the essential cogs in a great era of transition."

Miss Laut is so familiar with the scene and the times, which she has traversed in a score of solid books, that her life of Cadillac has an almost contemporaneous ring.

And so, out of the fogs of myth, emerge the massive figures of the American Argonauts.

TWO SURVIVORS OF THE WAR

Winston S. Churchill's "A Roving Commission" (published by Scribner) draws a realistic picture of his early life. The great noisemaker dedicates his book "to a new generation" and calls upon young men all over the world to take their "places in life's fighting line. . . . Do not be content with things as they are."

All the things Churchill has done—his life in Cuba, India, and his association with Kitchener in Egypt, go to make up an interesting story. He had a thrilling escape from the Boers. His war correspondence and his American trip are no less lively. His later activities in the Orange Free State and in England round out the story of one seldom right but never in doubt.

"Education of a Princess," by Marie, Grand Duchess of Russia (published by Viking Press), reveals the life of royalty when the Czars ruled. Marie, granddaughter of Alexander II, spent her early life in a palace on the Neva. In 1896 she went to Moscow for the coronation of Nicholas II, last ceremony of its kind.

War was declared against Japan in 1904, and much time was spent in hospitals. Going to the Moscow Opera House one night, Marie escaped a war plot when her uncle, Grand Duke Serge, was blown to death by a bomb as he drove to the palace.

The story goes on with her entrance into court circles, her marriage to Prince William of Sweden and later her divorce. Great interest lies in what she tells about the great war—how she spent hours in hospitals and finally escaped from Russia. Now she lives in America, like thousands of other refugees.

American Lives Worth While

Charles H. L. Johnston's second book, "Famous American Athletes of Today" (published by Page), picks the best representative of each sport; a history of his achievement is given with something about the personality.

Charles Francis Adams, "skipper" on the yacht Resolute which won the Hundred Guinea Cup, is selected as the yachtsman.

Richard Evelyn Byrd was the first aviator to circle the North and South Poles.

Glenna Collett, champion woman golfer, also gets into this album. At the age of 4 she could swim and dive, and could drive an automobile at 10.

Amelia Earhart, first woman to fly across the Atlantic, is the famed aviatrix hailed as "Lady Lindy." Her plane was financed by Mrs. Frederick Guest, of London, a former Pittsburgher. Miss Earhart says "three oranges comprised my bill of fare, with the exception of probably a dozen small malted milk tablets."

Walter Johnson is the baseball hero. George Owen, Jr., is the outstanding hockey player. Earle Sande, freckle-faced, sandy-haired, is the "prince of jockeys."

A short history of prize fighting is given up to the time of Jack Sharkey, the American heavyweight champion, whose parents are Lithuanians. Gus Sonnenberg is the champion wrestler, while James Thorpe is named as the "all-around athlete." He is a half-breed Indian educated at the Carlisle School.

Johnny Appleseed

"Johnny Appleseed and His Time" (published by Shenandoah) is Henry A. Pershing's story of the eccentric youth who traveled the western wilderness 40 years, scattering appleseeds and doing kindly deeds. Of Scotch ancestry, his forebears were clergymen, poets, attorneys and knights. Young John Chapman, or Johnny Appleseed, loved to wander in the woods and gather medicinal herbs. He loved Sarah Crawford, but her father forbade the marriage. When they parted Sarah gave him a spray of apple blossoms.

Henry Chapin tells the story with differences in "The Adventures of Johnny Appleseed" (published by Coward-McCann). According to him Johnny lived in Pittsburgh from 1794 to 1806. He got a parcel of land with a dozen apple trees for helping a man build a flatboat for a river trip to Kentucky. He had almost a hundred dollars, and prepared to build a house at the foot of Grant's Hill, where the needy found their way to his door. But he could not settle down, so in 1806 he went down river to the mouth of the Muskingum and then to Marietta.

He always carried a bag of appleseed on his shoulder. When the Indians were raiding in the war of 1812 he walked barefoot through the wilderness 60 miles to save Fort Mansfield. He never feared the red man. At the age of 61 he went down the Ohio, planting seed and teaching men how to care for orchards.

Father of the Reaper

William T. Hutchison's life of "Cyrus Hall McCormick" (published by Century), covers that life from 1809 to the Civil War. Cyrus helped his father in mill, field and smithy. He invented a light cradle of locust wood that allowed him to harvest the ripe grain with less strain on human muscles. He soon realized that the reaper needed the open prairie to make it a success.

McCormick's invention did more to revolutionize agriculture than any other. It permitted the farmer to reap as much as he could sow. Six laborers in 1830 might harvest two acres of wheat a day; the reaper enabled eight men and two horses to harvest 10 acres a day.

He established a factory in Chicago in 1850 under the name of McCormick, Ogden & Co. They were to turn out 1,500 reapers. That was the beginning of the vast enterprise and the expansion of our arable empire.

The Fishermen's Saint

Sir Wilfred Grenfell's thesis at his installation as rector of St. Andrew's University, "The Fisherman's Saint" (published by Scribner), shows the "Labrador Doctor," when two paths were open, always choosing the more venturesome. Andrew, patron saint of fishermen, appealed to him because his own work was chiefly among fishermen. Grenfell, knighted for his service to mankind, says: "All real seekers after truth are the world's greatest hope against the worst enemies of faith in man's great destiny."

He's for the Marines

John A. Lejeune writes of the men usually first on the scene of any trouble in "Reminiscences of a Marine" (published by Dorrance). His family were driven from Canada to Louisiana, where he went to State University, which William Tecumseh Sherman made a military school. Later young Lejeune entered the Naval Academy. He gives a thrilling account of shipwreck at Samoa and tells of his part in the Spanish-American War. In World War battles and seven months on the Rhine he met many adventures. During the Coolidge era he sent expeditions to China and Nicaragua. Of course he's for the Marines!

SOME BITS OF FUN AND FICTION

You will laugh your head off over the book of "Boners," by Those Who Pulled Them, collected by Dr. Seuss (published by Viking). Here you discover that "a prodigal is the son of a priest," that "a deacon is the lowest kind of a Christian," that "the law of gravity was enacted by the British Parliament," that "the Bible is against bigamy when it says a man cannot serve two masters," and hundreds of other bits of joyous misinformation.

The most popular dog in our more popular art, drawn by Edwina in the pages of "Life," is now the hero of a pictorial biography. "Sinbad: A Dog's Life (published by Coward-McCann) is the artistic record of the pup who got his name because at all times he's in bad.

Rivers of Heaven

Down in Alabama, along the Warrior River, life is leisurely and languid. Howell Vines elects himself as the Theocritus of this pastoral scene in "A River Goes With Heaven" (published by Little-Brown). There are katydids chanting all night long, with mocking birds and red-birds to vary the music. Halma is the nymph of this delightful nook, where they still talk the unsophisticated prattle of Paradise. It is a homely and tender story, sometimes monotonous, as it must have been in the Vale of Enna, but refreshing if you're tired of the rush and clamor of our civilization and the rude jolting of our modern morals.

Who Murdered Geraldine?

More than the usual plausibility is in the atmosphere of Anthony Abbot's novel "About the Murder of Geraldine Foster" (published by Covici-Friede). It gives the impression of a real police investigation. But, you can't by any stretch of your imagination believe in the actual guilt of the ultimate criminal. Nor is it at all clear what killed those pigeons—unless they were stool-pigeons. But it is an exciting story, and Thatcher Colt is a sleuth that criminals should be wary of.

Knight Exhibition, Third to Be Held Here, Ends Mar. 31

THE 17 YEARS since young eyes were enraptured by Laura Knight's drawings of Pavlowa in her first special exhibition at Carnegie Institute have marked the rise, development and crystallization of a career.

Penelope Redd

The current exhibition of Laura Knight's work is the third to be shown at Carnegie Institute. Her first one in 1914, showed a talent that was adventuring.

In her paintings at that time, Mrs. Knight fulfilled one's idea exactly of painters as English fiction writers portray them. She lived in Cornwall and painted young English women walking the summits of hills with children dancing ahead of them. All of these were done with obedient verisimilitude.

In the same exhibition were water color drawings less formal, but not pagan, showing bathers on rock-bound coasts.

Clue to Future

The clue to her future was in the dozen or so drawings of Pavlowa which Laura Knight had done in what might best be described as awe. They were the most sensitive drawings she ever did, and also the finest interpretations of the flower of grace that was the old Russian ballet in its zenith.

Laura Knight, reminiscing on her student days, once said:

"In those days, women were not allowed to paint from the nude, and we had to study such parts of the human form as were revealed to us by the school censors. For years I have visited the theaters to draw ballet girls."

Certainly, after the turmoil of the war years were past, Laura Knight had moved into another field for her pictorial observations.

In her subsequent paintings at Carnegie International and in her special exhibition of prints in aquatint, mezzotint and etching, five or six years ago, Laura Knight had abandoned the English countryside for the dressing-room of the ballet and the amusements at street carnivals.

Southern Influence

A lengthy visit with friends in Baltimore, also concentrated her busy hand on the forceful forms of the American Negro as an art subject.

Her current exhibition at Carnegie Institute, however, is almost entirely devoted to studies of circus life, in oil and water color painting, and in graphic mediums.

Dame Knight, now over 50 years old, her title came logically to cap her honor of admission to the Royal Academy, has increased her technical proficiency in the long years since 1914.

Always committed to the use of forceful color to emphasize forms, she is now addicted to a program of color bravura.

Viewing the exhibition one keeps seeking for some hidden comment beneath her matter-of-fact statement. The nearest approach in the paintings is found in "The Gauze Curtain" with Pavlowa and in "Papillon" where the citrons, blues, jades and orchids are muted.

Circus Souvenirs

The circus souvenirs are baldly stated, excellently drawn, figure compositions of athletes in motley garb and horses panoplied for the ring. Of the world of Jim Tully, there is no hint. Of Munnings' world, where the horse is the symbol of aristocracy, there is no vestige.

Laura Knight's is a world of acrobats, clowns and lion tamers, who have no more glamour for the observer than the corner policeman.

Somewhere there has been lost a quality which might have made Dame Laura Knight a great painter to compare with the men painters of the ages.

Her potential power to achieve the heights, as yet unscaled by woman, is seen in her print, "A Cornish Harbor."

Dame Knight's exhibition will be on view through March 31 and will not be shown in any other city in the United States.

Cora Lee

Cora Lee has been well-known to a group of persons interested in painters. She never gave up painting, despite her last, long illness. During the winter, she welcomed the noise of a neighborhood football game, and joyfully translated its boisterousness into a vigorous drawing.

The flowers from the family garden were friendly models. The selection of her painting "Zinnias" as the most popular flower painting in the Associated Artists' exhibition was not known until after her passing.

Gladys Goffe

Gladys Goffe has an exhibition at Elliott's. Figures and landscapes are in the majority. Her group of six water color designs of flowers against a black background is delightfully decorative.

SOCIETY THE SUNDAY SUN-TELEGRAPH PITTSBURGH, MARCH 15, 1931 CLUBS AUTOS and RESORTS

Parade of Spring Brides Soon to Wend Way to Altar

Gay Whirl Unabated As Season Nears End In Southern Resorts

The approaching Easter season will sound the knell of the southern resort season of 1931. After the holidays wanderers still loath to return home will be found in resorts in Virginia, West Virginia and the Carolinas, or abroad. Already the resorts nearer home are attracting many of the social world.

The final weeks of the southern season are as gay as ever. At Palm Beach many events are planned for the coming days, among them the annual luncheon of the Hobe Sound Yacht Club to be held St. Patrick's Day at the Olympia Beach Inn.

The Rev. Dr. and Mrs. Maitland Alexander are back at the "White House," their Palm Beach place, following a fishing trip among the Keys on their yacht. Their party included their daughter, Madelaine, Mrs. Alexander's sister, Mrs. William Christopher Robinson, and her niece, Mary Franklin Robinson. Mrs. Elisabeth Horne, of New York, formerly of Pittsburgh, also has been a guest at "White House.'

Join Gay Colony

One of the most interesting arrivals at Palm Beach is Mrs. W. Harry Brown, of Pittsburgh, London and Washington, who is at the Breakers. She has just arrived from Havana.

Henry Oliver Rea entertained Sunday night at the Colony Club.

Mrs. Alexander entertained on Monday with a luncheon and bridge at her home in honor of Mrs. Horne. Mrs. Alexander, her daughter, Mrs. Robinson, and Mary Robinson, together with the Edward Small Moores, are seen daily at the Everglades Golf Club.

Polly Laughlin and Elizabeth Cuddy, two young Pittsburgh girls, have just become members of the Palm Beach Girl Scouts.

Prominent among the visitors at the Beach have been the Eugene W. Pargnys and the Cyrus R. Millers.

Home from South

Home from St. Petersburg, Fla., are the Albert Horne Burchfields. Before leaving they entertained a group of Pittsburghers at the Soreno in honor of Mrs. Norman F. Brown, of Amberson avenue. Among the guests were Mrs. Sidney W. Binns, Mrs. Brown's daughter; Mrs. Robert McCurdy, Mrs. William Bell, James M. Shields and Harold Shields.

Mrs. John G. Frazer and her sub-deb daughter, Katherine, a student at the French School, New York, have gone to Miami Beach, where they'll remain for Katherine's spring vacation.

At Southern Pines, N. C., are the James Dawson Callerys, who plan to return to town in mid-April. Aiken, Hot Springs and White Sulphur Springs will be the mecca of many folks during the coming weeks.

Miss Elinor Munroe Selects April 8 as Date for Marriage

By PATRICIA PITT

Three weeks from this morning you'll see all the smart folks in gay spring attire faring forth to church to give thanks for Easter with its release from gray winter days and Lenten drabness, with its opening of the sunny Pascal season and its parade of lovely spring brides. And the procession will continue until July with its torrid temperament has driven folks to summer resorts.

The first of the stately brides of Eastertide is lovely Elinor Duncan Munroe, daughter of the James Duncan Munroes, of Stratford avenue, who has named Wednesday, April 8, as the date for her marriage to Gaynor Keeler, son of the William H. Keelers, of Albany and Altamont, New York.

And the ceremony, a distinctively small event, will take place at 5 o'clock in the Munroe home, to be followed by a reception.

To Wed in West

Another wedding of the month of Easter will interest Pittsburgh society, although it will not take place here.

Janet Seely, daughter of the Garrett Teller Seelys, of Evanston, Ill., has named Saturday, April 25, as the date for her marriage to Richard Johnston Swan, son of Mrs. Robert Swan, of Walnut street. The wedding will take place at 4:30 o'clock in the afternoon in the Seely home.

Among the events planned to precede the ceremony are a dinner for the bridal party and members of the two families on April 24 and the bachelor dinner on Thursday, April 23.

Kier Wedding

One of the most awaited weddings of the season took place this week in Paris. Frances Myler Kier, daughter of the Frank J. Kiers, of Beechwood boulevard, was the bride, and she married Baron Jean Pellenc, son of Baronne and the late Gen. Baron Pellenc, of Paris. The civil ceremony on Monday took place before the Maire of the Eighth Arrondissement. The religious

More Than 500 Aided By Exchange in Year

One of the most notable organizations in the country, founded and conducted by social leaders, is the Women's Industrial Exchange, Penn avenue, Pittsburgh. The daughters, granddaughters, and daughters-in-law of the 40 women who founded the Exchange are now directing it.

Its first president was Mrs. William Reed Thompson, of Pittsburgh and New York, who happens just now to be in town.

The Exchange receives clothing, food and articles suitable for gifts, and sells them on a commission basis for women who must earn money, but still cannot leave their homes.

Mrs. W. C. Moreland is treasurer; Mrs. George Macbeth, assistant treasurer; Mrs. Walter S. Heron, recording secretary; Mrs. Samuel Alfred McClung, assistant recording secretary; Mrs. Albert Wells, corresponding secretary; and Mrs. T. C. Wurts, assistant corresponding secretary.

Safety Brochures Bring Compiler Wide Commendation

Programs for Club Work Are Suggested in Leaflets Prepared by Mrs. Miller

By MRS. CHARLES M. BREGG

Club Editor

A piece of work that has brought her widespread commendation both in General and State Federation circles is the set of leaflets which Mrs. D. Edwin Miller has prepared for distribution in the two organizations. Mrs. Miller is chairman of the committees on fire prevention and street and highway safety in the national federation and chairman of the division of community service in the state organization.

The State Federation leaflet has been dedicated to Mrs. John A. Frick, president, "with sincere appreciation for her courageous spirit and action along every line of service that promises great good to humanity." The material is a suggested program for the organization of safety committees by women's clubs, a full outline and a shorter one being offered.

Formation of an executive committee comprising leaders of schools, clubs, social, civic, business and professional groups and representatives from other organizations is the first step suggested.

Duties Outlined

A statistics committee that shall procure statistical material for the use of all committees and a program and speakers' committee are next in the plan of organization. The duties of each of these units are outlined in the leaflet.

Among the committees suggested are legislation and enforcement, fire prevention, home safety, street and highway safety, educational and publicity, with a most comprehensive list of duties outlined for each one. For instance, the educational committee would be expected to co-operate with schools, clubs, parent-teacher associations and other groups to arrange for safety lessons and clubs in schools, to organize safety patrols and junior councils, to give safety talks in school assemblies, to sponsor safety plays in schools and clubs, to arrange for at least an annual safety program in each club and to give safety talks especially against jay-walking.

Programs Delineated

Four programs for safety meetings are delineated, the first to include films or slides, the second to be given by juniors, the third to be a safety luncheon and the fourth a radio program. Information as to where safety lessons and literature, films, slides, posters and other wanted material can be obtained is included.

A foreword to one of the General Federation leaflets, written by Mrs. John F. Sippel, G. F. president, says:

"It must be remembered that women have a traffic duty as automobile operators; they have a traffic duty as mothers and home-makers, and they have a traffic duty as citizens of a community. Women, therefore, represent a group whose co-operation is essential to reducing to a minimum street and highway accidents."

Challenge to Women

In her introduction, Mrs. Miller, the compiler, observes:

"If, during the year 1930, a great disaster had visited the prosperous city of Rome, N. Y., leaving not a single one of its 32,500 inhabitants alive, the world would have been shocked. Certainly communities everywhere would immediately have taken all possible steps to protect themselves from a similar fate. Yet, in the year 1930, 32,500 people lost their lives in the United States in traffic accidents, most of which could have been prevented. This situation, growing worse from year to year, presents a challenge of the first magnitude to the women of America."

Mrs. Miller then proceeds to tell the women what to do to insure greater safety on the streets and highways and outlines virtually the same plan of organization which she offered to the state, only varying the suggested activities for the committees.

In the fire prevention leaflet Mrs. Miller has gathered together some astonishing statistics, and an invaluable list of safety rules and "What To Do" towards fire prevention study and activity.

INCIDENTALLY—

The Health Colony Club recently sponsored a series of four concerts at the Helping Hand which were much appreciated by the audience.

One of the most commendatory pieces of club work hereabouts is done by the Junior Homewood Women's Club. These young girls, about a dozen of them, go to the United States Veterans' Hospital the first Wednesday night of each month and spend the evening playing cards with "the boys."

Another of those right-hand things of which the left hand knows nothing is carried on by the Squirrel Hill Community Club. Taking their luncheons with them, the women give one day each month mending at the Industrial Home for Crippled Children.

The Mt. Holyoke Club members are selling Mt. Holyoke playing cards to raise their contribution to the Mt. Holyoke centenary fund.

Miss Munroe Names Date For Wedding

ceremony took place the following day in the Church of St. Phillippe du Roulle. Baron Gabriel Pellenc was his brother's best man, and the bride had no attendants.

The lovely, young titian-haired bride wore a gown of white satin with a flowing court train, and a veil of white tulle, finished with a cap of old rose point. After the ceremony the Kiers gave a luncheon in the Hotel Georges V. Among the guests were the Franklin G. McIntoshes, of Franklin, Pa., and the Henry Smiths and their daughter, Margaret, of Pittsburgh.

Frances attended Miss Porter's School, Farmington, Conn., and made her debut in the fall. The baron attended the Sorbonne in Paris and is a sculptor and painter of the modern school. The bride is also a talented artist.

After a honeymoon in the Balearic Isles, the baron and baroness will sail for the United States, in June. Next January they will occupy a permanent residence in Paris.

Miss Close Weds

One of the loveliest weddings of March took place Thursday afternoon in the Pittsburgh Country Club at 5:30 o'clock, when Betty Ganter Close, daughter of the Howard Dauler Closes, of Murrayhill avenue, became the bride of Samuel Richard Robb, son of the Samuel G. Robbs, of Latrobe. The Rev. H. H. Forsyth, of the Sixth Presbyterian Church, officiated.

The bride wore an unusual gown of old rose point lace, with a full court train, and a veil of ivory tulle, finished with a cap of old rose point. She carried a sheaf of calla lilies and Russian status.

The bride's cousin, Kathryn Close, was the maid of honor, wearing a gown of yellow canton crepe, accented with apple green crepe, and a hat of natural French imported straw banded with green velvet. The bride's sister, Elsie Jane Close, as junior bridesmaid, wore orchid crepe trimmed with yellow, and a hat similar to that of her cousin.

The bridesmaids all wore gowns of crepe, made alike. Virginia Johnston wore green trimmed with orchid; Mrs. Harry Kerr Runette, turquoise blue and coral pink; Mrs. William G. Sander, coral pink and turquoise blue, and Mrs. Thomas Fitzgerald, Jr., tangerine accented with brown. Their French straw hats were banded with velvet in the accenting color of their frocks. They carried spring flowers.

John F. Robb was his brother's best man. The ushers included Edgar F. Sadd, Harrison F. Gleason, John B. Sheedy and Harry I. Hagmaier.

At the dinner, the bride's table, in the form of a horseshoe, was centered with pastel shades of spring flowers in low crystal bowls, on a cloth of silver. The Robbs will make their home in Pittsburgh when they return from a honeymoon in Bermuda.

An engagement of interest here is that of Suzanne LePage Robbins, daughter of the Harre Robbinses, of Roland Park, Baltimore, formerly of Pittsburgh, to George Morrison Coates Nelson, son of the late William Marbury Nelson and Mrs. Nelson, of Baltimore.

Suzanne made her debut this winter, and is the first of the Baltimore 1930 buds whose betrothal has been announced.

SOCIALITES NO. XXXIV

From Life by William R. Shulgold.

MRS. WILLIAM MACLAY HALL, the stately president of the Twentieth Century Club, is one of the prominent figures in Pittsburgh society. For a number of years she has been active in this club of society women.

She's interested in the drama, too, and has often taken part in the plays presented by the drama department of the club.

Mrs. Hall has always been a patron of music. She's president of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra, and is an associate member of the Tuesday Musical Club.

Mrs. Hall has three daughters, all of whom have inherited her executive ability. Mrs. William Larimer Jones, Jr., formerly Augusta Hall, and Mrs. J. L. D. Painter, formerly Eleanor Hall, are prominent members of the board of managers of the Women's Exchange, and Priscilla Hall is active in the Junior League. By the way, Priscilla has inherited her mother's interest in interior decorating, and is making a serious study of the subject.

Selection in Near Future Of Uniform System for Contract Bridge Indicated

By ERNEST H. HEINRICHS

Sun-Telegraph Bridge Expert.

As far as the development of a standard system of contracting for the declaration in the game of contract bridge is concerned, it is gratifying to those players who have already started the newer game to find that the multitude of bidding systems which has darkened the horizon in a pall of complications is being slowly and surely reduced in numbers.

There are at present reliable indications that before very long sponsors of the remaining few which are still striving for supremacy will, for the good of the game, get together and produce one uniform system that may be accepted by the general bridge playing public as the recognized standard.

Among the surviving systems which are enjoying the greatest popularity there are four that have the largest number of followers.

Four Originators

These four are known by the names of their authors as follows: the Shepard system, designed by E. V. Shepard, who first introduced and taught contract bridge in this country, the Work system, designed by Milton C. Work, who has been an internationally known authority on bridge for more than 30 years, the Whitehead system, created by Wilbur C. Whitehead, who stands only second to Mr. Work as a world-renowned authority; the fourth, but by no means least, is the Culbertson system, sponsored by Ely Culbertson, of New York City.

Although the latter belongs to the younger set of ranking experts in the game, his success as a player and the principles as well as theories upon the game evolved by him have forced his name and achievements to the very pinnacle of prominence in all matters pertaining to bridge.

The Culbertson system is known as the approach-forcing system. He is a personality of dynamic force and aggressiveness, and in his characteristic, energetic manner, he has not only demonstrated the soundness of his system, but he has also succeeded in carrying off most of the important tournament contests in this country.

It was also he, and a team selected by him, which went last year to London, England, where, in an international tournament and two additional international matches, that team played his method, won all the prizes and established the superiority of American bridge over English bridge.

Have Same Goal

It is not the purpose of this writer to draw invidious comparisons, indeed, in our opinion, all of these systems are inherently sound, although one may be more practical than the others. All of them aim for the same goal of obtaining the greatest results from any given hand dealt.

This aim of all four systems for the same object may be likened to a trip from Pittsburgh to San Francisco. Some of us like to go there by train, others by bus, others by automobile and others again by airplane. It is the same goal, but we use a different vehicle of travel.

However, to carry this comparison farther, you will observe that the Transcontinental Air Transport uses the advantages and facilities of rail and air to expedite the trip. It might therefore be suggested that it should not be very difficult to evolve from these four leading contracting systems one that would be uniform and acceptable to all. This indeed would be "a consummation devoutly to be wished," and would be hailed with approval by every bridge player.

Tournament Hands

The deal below was played at the Hotel Delmonico, New York, during the recent tournament of experts, and from reports we have received, the hands appear to have been regular stumbling blocks to the players. At most of the tables—the games were of course at duplicate—the contract was played at six diamonds, and in the third round for the "contract pair" championship, North and South were defeated, because South finessed the diamond lead from the dummy by playing the queen instead of omitting the finesse and playing the ace in his own hand, which obviously would have captured the singleton king held by West. This unfortunate play gave declarer a minus score instead of a win.

In some instances, East and West got the contract in spades, and while none of the teams bid that high a grand slam can be made at that declaration if the defense opens the lead conventionally.

The hands:

NORTH.
Spades—5.
Hearts—5-4-3.
Diamonds—10-7-5-3-2.
Clubs—A-K-Q-4.

WEST.
Spades—A-9-8-7-6-2.
Hearts—0.
Diamonds—K.
Clubs—J-8-6-5-4-3.

EAST.
Spades—K-Q-J-10-4-3.
Hearts—Q-J-10-9-6.
Diamonds—6-4.
Clubs—0.

SOUTH.
Spades—0.
Hearts—A-K-8-7-2.
Diamonds—A-Q-J-9-8.
Clubs—10-9-2.

Grand Slam

Here is a deal, which was played at Auction Bridge in Mt. Lebanon. In this game, South obtained the contract as dealer by making her original, opening bid one spade. By manipulating her cards in a brilliant manner she made a grand slam, although East held two aces against her. Could you do as well?

The deal:

NORTH.
Spades—A-J-10.
Hearts—K-Q-J-4.
Clubs—10-2.
Diamonds—K-Q-J-5.

WEST.
Spades—9-8-4.
Hearts—10-9-8-7.
Clubs—9-5-3.
Diamonds—10-9-7.

EAST.
Spades—3.
Hearts—6-5-3-2.
Clubs—A-Q-J-8-6.
Diamonds—A-3-2.

SOUTH.
Spades—K-Q-7-6-5-2.
Hearts—A.
Clubs—K-7-4.
Diamonds—8-6-4.

West opens the lead with the 10 of hearts, and thereafter South takes all 13 tricks.

Bridge Brevities

When you hold up the highest unplayed card in an opponent's suit you are "blocking" the suit.

You buy or purchase the contract by making the highest bid.

* * *

W. R. S., North Negley avenue: "Court cards" is an expression which originated in the game of whist, and the king, queen and jack were known as court cards.

Holding the king and one spot, it is not considered good practice to lead the king.

* * *

E. F. G., Brownsville, Pa.—It is not against the rules to open the lead with a trump declarer. In fact, such a lead may, under certain conditions, be most advisable. For example: your partner has opened the contracting by bidding one no trump, and he is overcalled by a suit bid by the second player, who also becomes declarer. Your hand holds one, or at the most, two small trumps only; lead one of your trumps, as such a play may help your partner, who obviously is strongest in the other suits.

SPECIAL TRIPS PLANNED FOR EASTER SEASON

Hamburg-American Cruisers Set for Trips to West Indies and Irish Ports

An Easter cruise of 16 days of the Reliance, of the Hamburg-American Line, will sail from New York Saturday, March 28, for the West Indies.

The cruise itinerary includes Port-au-Prince, Kingston, Colon and Havana. The ship is scheduled to arrive in Colon April 4. The passengers will have a full day for the optional excursion across the Isthmus of Panama which will be made by train, tender and automobile to Panama City and Balboa. Many of the passengers are expected to avail themselves of the opportunity to fly, either one way or both, across the isthmus, in planes of the Isthmian Airways. Time for shopping will be allowed in both Colon and Panama City. The Reliance will sail from Colon on Easter Day. This will be the last of the Reliance Pleasure Pirate Pilgrimages of the season, but a series of similar cruises is scheduled for next winter.

Another Easter trip, a personally conducted excursion to Ireland on the new cabin class motorship Milwaukee, is scheduled to sail from New York March 27, and to arrive at Galway April 4, the day before Easter. The Milwaukee carries cabin, tourist third cabin, and third class passengers. During the voyage across the Atlantic a special program of entertainment will be carried out, which will consist of Irish music, dancing and concerts. Martin Rowan, Irish representative of the Hamburg-American Line's Chicago office, will be in charge of the party. From Galway the Milwaukee will proceed to Cherbourg and Hamburg.

DICKENS ACTOR TO LEAD TOUR

Mortimer Kaphan, portrayer of various male characters in Dickens, will head a large party of Americans who, under the auspices of the American Dickens League, Inc., will sail from New York July 10 on the Cunarder Tuscania for a tour of the places frequented by Dickens or featured by his books.

From London the party will proceed through Chalk, near Gravesend, where the English author spent his honeymoon and where he wrote the Pickwick Papers. Gads Hill, where stands Falstaff Inn which housed the famous Dick Turpin, and Dickens' home will next be visited. The party will move on to Canterbury, and then to Broadstairs, where Dickens wrote "Nicholas Nickelby," "Old Curiosity Shop," "Barnaby Rudge," "David Copperfield" and "The Haunted Man."

After a night in Eastbourne, the party will return to London, making day-by-day visits to Lewes, Crawley, Dorking, Epsom and Kingston, the last being featured by Dickens in "Oliver Twist." The party will then visit the Shakespeare country, following which they will cross the channel for a three-week tour of the continent that will extend as far as Rome.

Barton Appointed To New Position

Officials of the Seaboard Air Line Railway have announced the appointment of Clyde B. Barton, now district passenger agent for the company here, to assistant general passenger agent, effective immediately. His office is to remain in this city. This announcement comes with comparative closeness on his appointment as district passenger agent in June, 1929, when he succeeded J. M. Stuart, who was transferred to Buffalo at that time.

Sodality Plans Series of Trips

The sodality of Sacred Heart Church has announced four week-end trips this year, the first of which will be to New York City April 4 to 6.

While in New York the party will go aboard the Cunard liner, Mauretania, for tea and a tour of inspection. Headquarters will be established in the Pennsylvania Hotel. Miss Margaret H. Sweeney, of 6202 Alder street, has been named secretary of the trips.

SUGGEST NAMES FOR NEW SHIP

Since the French line announced it plans some weeks ago for a new giant turbo-electric liner which is expected to be larger and faster than any ship afloat, and asked for suggestions for a name for it, more than 600 letters have been received by the line from all over the United States and Canada, offering a wide variety of names, running the gamut from the sublime "Jeanne d' Arc" to the ridiculous "Mademoiselle From Armentiers."

While the latter suggestion was the choice of only one humorist, more than three score letters have urged the use of "Jeanne d'Arc," and three have varied the same idea with the proposal that it be named "Maid of Orleans."

The line has announced that a name will not be decided upon definitely for some time to come, since the keel was laid only a couple of weeks ago and the liner will not be ready for service until the spring of 1934, but when the time for selecting the name comes, there will be no scarcity of suggestions from which to choose.

MADELON'S MIRROR OF FEMININE FANCY

WE hope you're properly excited about the Dinnerware Sale that's going on down at Reizenstein's this month, where bargains are as thick as roses in June. Of course it isn't necessary, but anyway we'll tell you, that Reizenstein's have been in the fine glass and china business for over three-quarters of a century, and that when they announce a bargain you can depend upon its legitimacy. So saying, we announce that this Dinnerware Sale includes four special Ahrenfeldt dinner sets at the lowest prices ever quoted by Reizenstein's for Ahrenfeldt china; many discontinued dinnerware patterns marked down half; a 32-piece Hampton English Ivory luncheon set for $13.75; all plated silver marked down one-half; all open stock dinnerware priced 15% less, and many other equally astounding bargains. Now you know . . . and Reizenstein's are handy . . . 625 Liberty Avenue.

. . . For Tuesday

TOP O' THE MORNIN'

THOSE sporting souls who go home with a candy box under arm at every holiday will find Dimling's a fit place for their St. Patrick's Day shopping. In honor of the gentleman, Dimling's have specialed for the week that delicious Chocolate-covered Mint Paste . . . 60 cents a pound instead of 80, and destined to please the most finicky of jelly paste connoisseurs. This is the piece that one lady had made to her order three years ago and so many other people liked that they made it ever after. You'll also find an amusing assortment of St. Patrick's favors and novelties for the youngsters at Dimling's . . . everything from a chocolate pig with a green ribbon 'round his waist to a top hat filled with green gumdrops. At the seven Dimling shops, or direct from the factory, 801 Liberty avenue.

. . . Three Easter Cruises

THERE'S a book on our desk right now that you'd be terribly interested in. On the cover is a picture of an enormous steamship. And in nice hand-lettering, it says "3 EASTER CRUISES . . . EACH 9½ DAYS . . . SAILING APRIL 3rd (Good Friday) . . . BACK IN NEW YORK SUNDAY, APRIL 12th . . . THE NATIONAL TOURS." Inside, details of the 3 trips—2 to Bermuda, 1 to Havana and Nassau. Tales of the glorious times aboard the ship (your home during the entire trip). Reprinted menus . . . and what gastronomic triumphs! Pictures of parties aboard, of Rudy Vallee's orchestra, of Bermuda . . . Havana . . . Nassau. And prices are a joy to behold. You can have this book by calling or stopping to see Mr. John Miller, Travel Dept., Union Savings Bank (Frick Building).

. . . Service Plates Reduced

GOODY, goody, goody, Reizenstein's have included in their March Dinnerware Sale that service plate which we told you about some time back . . . you know the one . . . hand done on exquisite continental china, with a wide border of etched gold in Persian design and a delicate floral group center? $49.50 a dozen, and they were more than twice that much! The offer was repeated by special request, which looks as if they might not last long, so don't dilly-dally around. Also included in this March event is Reizenstein's complete open stock of dinnerware, priced 15% less than usual. Cauldon, Minton, Crown Ducal, Myott, Doulton, and dozens of other important china makers are represented, so better make your first shopping stop of the week 625 Liberty Avenue.

. . . Pruning and Spraying

NOW is the time for all people who take a pride in how their garden grows to get busy with pruning shears and sprayers. Beckert's, at 101 Federal Street, (just over the Sixth Street bridge) have a very comprehensive window display of this sort of thing right now. But don't stop with the windows —go in and let one of their experts tell you what to do to make the roses more luxuriant, how to get rid of those pesky potato bugs, what part of your trees and bushes should be lopped off, and so on. This is dormant season, you know, and that's the time for this part of the business of raising things. And Beckert's have the best of equipment. After you've been 50 years in the seed business, you'd naturally know the best.

. . . Molder of Figures

WHY in the world will stout women go frittering around trying out every new ready-made corset under the sun and not be pleased with any of them, yet never think to experiment in a made-to-order garment? We think it's too bad, and if you know any such women, tell them about Mrs. Lasner, won't you? Mrs. Lasner, whose attractive little studio is at 604 Clark Building, is the designer of a lightweight, comfortable-as-your-skin garment which does really remarkable things to ill-proportioned figures. It can pull in protruding abdomens (and hold them in, too), distribute rolls of flesh from around the waist, make wide hips slim by distributing the flesh, and generally re-mold bulgy, unsymmetrical figures into ones of beautiful line. Why not talk to her?

. . . Regulation Coats

FOR the active child (there's a phrase that covers a multitude of juvenile sins), no doting mama could better solve the coat problem than by buying a dark blue cheviot "regulation" coat. The Jay Kiddie Shop, at 3007 Jenkins Arcade, has them in proper regulation lines, excellently tailored, some with black bone buttons, and some with the spread-eagle brass buttons which look tremendously soldier-like to small boys and delight their souls thereby. Incidentally, they have button-holes on both sides, so that either Paul or Pauline can wear them without defying convention. Lined in heavy striped silk or red kasha, and topped off by either sporty peaked caps or rakish berets. Sizes 1 to 6. * * * You'll also find a goodly selection of boys' and girls' tailored tweeds at this shop.

. . . LeBaron Roadster

FROM the fine French hand of LeBaron comes the design for this swift, flashing Lincoln roadster, which, lo and behold, becomes a standard collapsible coupe when its top and side windows are raised. A carefree car with its top down . . one to sail swiftly and gaily along in, hair flying in the breezes, whole body responding to the exhilarating effect of air and sunshine. And if it rains, who cares? There's a top to go up in a jiffy, shutting out the weather; keeping you, as you always are in a Lincoln, safe and comfortable. For that extra couple there's a rumble seat, more comfortable than you ever dreamed rumble seat could be. Spring's almost here. You'll want an open car. See this roadster at the Linford Motor Company, 5124 Liberty Avenue.

. . . Watch Developments

REMEMBER the August afternoons spent on the beach, and how your body drank in the sunshine, lazily content — but with a delicious consciousness of physical and nervous power just waiting to be called into action? Proof of the power of sunshine, my dears. You can get the same effect by a twice-a-week Sun Bath of five or six minutes at the Natatorium, 540 Duquesne Way. Tuesday and Thursday are Ladies' Days; Sun Baths, 50 cents, 6 for $2.00. And now, get excited. There's a Learn-to-Swim Campaign in the offing . . . 6 lessons over a period of 3 weeks, after which you'll SWIM, believe it or not. A high-up in swimming circles, who has just completed a big season in California, will be your teacher, and we hear he has a method which he's used successfully all over the United States. More about this later.

. . . The Store of Unhurried Service

FOLKS who take their shoe-shopping seriously (and if you don't, you ought to), will find Ritter & Morrison's, at 501 Liberty Avenue, the realization of their fondest hopes. Their corps of salespeople fit shoes with an admirable efficiency, and Job in his strongest moments couldn't have matched them in patience. "The Store of Unhurried Service" is one slogan which means what it says. Ritter & Morrison's sell the Menihan Arch-Aid shoe, which has gone far towards being the best comfort shoe on the market, without losing its style qualities on the way. If you're doubtful about this style-angle, just go in and try on the oxford sketched. In black kid and snake, with wooden heel. It's ready for a lot of pounding of city streets.

. . . Whole Wheat Bread

THANK heaven, we've at last found a loaf of bread that comes up to the doctors' specifications, and doesn't taste like something you'd expect to come up to a doctor's specifications. It's this Whole Wheat Bread at Rhea's Bakeries, and the trick of its flavor is that they grind the flour fresh every day on their own little stone mill, and then make it into bread less than 12 hours after it's ground. Furthermore, it doesn't pile up calories, for it's sweetened with California Orange Blossom Honey instead of sugar or molasses. (Diabetics, harken!) Buy it downtown at 441 Market street; East Liberty at 6007 Penn avenue; Squirrel Hill at 1725 Murray avenue, and North Side at Rhea's in Boggs & Buhl's store.

. . . Ring Lizard, $8.50

NEXT time you're passing through the main drag of the Jenkins Arcade, drop in Petty's Shoe Company and try on that new ring lizard pump—genuine ring lizard, not the painted-on kind — which is about to start a lot of action at a price of $8.50. Quite swell, this pump of Petty's, all grey, except the heel, which is black patent and the little triangular patent insets on sides and front. And it's terribly good lizard . . . soft and pliable as chamois skin. This same ring lizard is made up in a smart Cuban-heeled oxford with grey kid heel, and in a strap slipper with a patent heel. Call Atlantic 1444 if you want to know more about them, and keep in mind that Petty's not only accept but invite charge accounts.

. . . Now for Foxes

FROM the way things look now, any lady who hasn't a fox scarf to complement her spring 1931 suit is going to feel decidedly out of the picture. One thing we wish to emphasize . . . if you are going to buy one, for heaven's sake buy it now. We're not attempting to high-pressure you; we're just advising you for your own good that the first shipment of these animals (as the first shipment of anything, usually) is the cream of the market . . . the ones from which the jobbers hope to take re-orders. Naturally, they're going to pick out their finest and fullest. You'll believe this when you see the first arrivals at the Connolly Fur Shop, 207 Fifth avenue (third floor) . . . Pointed, Silver, Red, Cross, Natural White and Dyed White . . . as gorgeous furs as you'll ever see, at prices lower than you'll see again.

. . . Fruit Box Special

A BARGAIN that's going to make you all sit up and take notice is the gift box of fresh fruit at McClements this week. $2.00, my dear, and it has about ten different kinds of fruit as well as a jar of candied figs, a package of sweet cakes, and oh, lots of surprises! It's a much larger box than they usually special at $2.00, so, play up to your thrifty instincts and buy when you see a bargain. McClements, by the way, are already beginning to look terribly Easter-y. Bunnies peeping out from everywhere . . . calla lilies in profusion . . . samples of Easter corsages . . . talk of fixing Easter baskets. You won't have long to wait to see this fine fruit and flower shop at 535 Wood street in full Easter regalia.

. . . Request Week

IT'S a good thing we have Request Week in Utility Hall once in a while; otherwise a great many of us would go to our graves with the humiliating admission that we never did learn to make egg souffle, or Russian dressing, or whatever happens to be our culinary stickler. On Monday at 7:30 and Tuesday at 2 Miss Fladoes will demonstrate dishes which have already been requested. Friday at 2, diplomas will be presented to those completing the Home-makers' Series, and after that, more request dishes. You still have time to send in your requests for Friday—write to Utility Hall, 435 Sixth Ave., or call Grant 4300. Utility Hall is the Home Service Department of the Duquesne Light and Equitable Gas Companies. No charge!

. . . Easter Permanent

FOR that all-dressed-up look that Easter demands, we suggest that you run right in and get yourself a permanent wave. No Easter outfit, be it ever so glowing, is going to feel entirely at ease if it has to drape itself on a frowsy-headed individual. Besides, there will be plenty of festivities at Easter-time, and with everyone else with lustrous wavy locks, how are you going to feel without a curl? Monsieur Lichti at Maison Frederic's, 207 Fifth avenue, gives the sort of wave that everybody wants and hardly anybody gets—a wide, smooth, satiny affair which makes a beauty dazzling, a pretty girl beautiful, and a plain girl pretty. Just you call him at Atlantic 0884 and tell him you'll be in this week . . . as Easter draws near, this gentleman's going to be awfully busy. 207 Fifth avenue.

. . . Chippendale Group

AT Gilbert's Fine Furniture we saw a Chippendale group which struck our humble fancy as being just the thing for the small apartment. Item No. 1, a sofa . . . nail-trimmed, custom-made in choice of fabric, and delicately graceful as the ones designed by Thomas Chippendale himself, 'way back in the 18th century. Item No. 2, an occasional chair, beautifully made, exquisitely finished. Item No. 3, that indispensable piece, the coffee table, with scalloped edge and removable glass top. The sofa is $168; the chair, $47.50; the coffee table, $19.50; making a total of $235 for as handsome a group as ever graced a modern living room. Gilbert's are at 632 Smithfield Street, and you must see this group.

. . . Sandals Are In

CREATORS of frivolous footwear present the sandal as the one shoe destined to bring down the house this spring and summer. And, to let you in on one of our important discoveries, Parisian Bootery has a sandal for $6.95 that's a twin in every line to that of a famous maker whose footgear runs into the big money. The model sketched is honey beige kid with saddle and border of genuine water snake. It comes also in black kid with python trim, and in black seafoam satin with crepe trim. The same model is due to arrive at Parisian in several light color combinations, all lined throughout in leather, so that they hold their shape to the end. Parisian Bootery, Roosevelt Hotel, Penn Avenue and Sixth Street.

. . . After College

TO add a last practical touch to their education and assure themselves of a way of making a living at any time, many college and university graduates are enrolling in the Grace Martin Secretarial School (18th floor, Keenan Building). Some of these girls are taking specialty work—for instance, Mrs. Cornelius told us of one Bryn Mawr graduate enrolled who is preparing herself for a hospital work by a special course in medical shorthand. It's interesting to discover that Grace Martin's enrollment this year is twice as large as it has ever been before, and that it is made up almost entirely of excellently educated girls, who realize that with a good academic background, coupled with a thorough secretarial training their opportunities are limitless. Write for the catalogue, why don't you?

FOLLOW THESE RULES

RULE 1. A series of pictures will be published by the Sun-Telegraph each week for ten (10) consecutive weeks, beginning January 25, 1931. Each such group of pictures will constitute a separate and complete contest. Each picture will depict a historical or romantic event in the development of America. With each week's pictures the Sun-Telegraph will publish a list of historic and romantic events, which list will include the correct answers to each such series.

RULE 2. In these ten (10) contests the Sun-Telegraph will pay a total of $2,500.00 to successful contestants, $250.00 of this amount being awarded in cash prizes for solutions of each weekly contest in accordance with these rules and schedule of prizes which appears on this page.

RULE 3. A space beneath each picture will be provided in which contestants are to write the name and date of the event depicted. All pictures for each week must be answered and only one (1) solution for each picture may be given. No one person may send in more than one (1) set of pictures and answers in any one (1) weekly contest.

RULE 4. It is not necessary that you buy a copy of the Sun-Telegraph or that you be a subscriber. When writing on pictures clipped from this newspaper do not use ink. Ink blurs on newspaper.

RULE 5. Those who may enter: Any person residing in the Pennsylvania, Ohio, West Virginia, western part of Maryland, western part of Virginia, western part of New York, except an employee or representative of the Sun-Telegraph or any other Hearst newspaper.

RULE 6. Contestants may trace or copy the pictures, or may clip the pictures from this newspaper. The complete set of pictures and answers to such pictures in Contest No. 8, bound together or mounted or colored, must be delivered to the place of business of the Sun-Telegraph, in care of "Old Glory Contest," at Telegraph Square, Pittsburgh, Pa., on or before 11 P. M. on Sunday, Mar. 22, 1931, or if mailed, must be sent by first-class mail, postage fully prepaid, and must be received at said place of business of the Sun-Telegraph, Telegraph Square, on or before 11 P. M. on Sunday, Mar. 22, 1931. CONTESTANT'S NAME AND ADDRESS AND THE NUMBER OF THE WEEKLY CONTEST TO WHICH SUCH ANSWERS RELATE MUST BE PLAINLY WRITTEN ON THE BACK OF THE PACKAGE OR ENVELOPE IN WHICH THE PICTURES AND ANSWERS ARE TRANSMITTED, AS WELL AS UPON THE ENTRY ITSELF, WHICH IS ENCLOSED IN SUCH PACKAGE OR ENVELOPE. The dimensions of such package or envelope shall not exceed three inches by nine inches by eleven inches. A duplicate complete list of the answers thus transmitted must be retained by the contestant.

RULE 7. The Sun-Telegraph will publish the correct solution to Old Glory Contest No. 8, Sunday, Mar. 29, 1931, which solution each contestant should compare with the duplicate list of his answers which he has retained. If upon such comparison the contestant find that his answers contain not more than three (3) errors, he shall address a postcard or telegram to the Sun-Telegraph, in care of "Old Glory Contest," Telegraph Square, Pittsburgh, Pa., reading as follows: "I have made only (here state number of errors), errors in Old Glory Contest No. (here state contest number)." The contestant's name and address must be plainly written or printed below. The postcard or telegram must be received at the place of business of the Sun-Telegraph, Telegraph Square, Pittsburgh, Pa., not later than 11 P. M. on Friday, April 3, 1931. The winners of Old Glory Contest No. 8 will be published in the Sun-Telegraph Sunday, April 12, 1931, or as soon thereafter as possible. The Sun-Telegraph shall not be bound by any statement in any such postcard or telegram, but no weekly group of pictures and answers will be considered unless such a postcard or telegram shall thereafter be received within the time limit specified above from the contestant transmitting the same. Any false statement in any such postcard or telegram may disqualify the contestant named therein from further participation or consideration not only in such weekly contest but also in any previous or subsequent "Old Glory Contest."

RULE 8. In each weekly contest the contestant who submits the largest number of correct answers will receive the first prize. The contestant who submits the second largest number of correct answers will receive the second prize, and so on. In case two (2) or more contestants are tied, i. e., have an equal number of correct answers, the correctness of spelling, neatness and appropriateness of binding, mounting and coloring shall (in the order named), be the determining factors by which the judges shall decide the winners from among such tied contestants. If when judged by these standards it is decided that two (2) or more sets or weekly groups of pictures and answers are equal in merit, then the prize awarded each such tied contestant shall be the amount which would have been awarded had there been no tie.

RULE 9. Three (3) judges, not connected with the Sun-Telegraph, will be selected by the Sun-Telegraph, to award the prizes and their identity will be made known prior to or at the time of the announcement of the awards. Every contestant expressly agrees that the decision of a majority of these judges on all matters submitted and their interpretation of these rules shall be final, conclusive and binding on every contestant.

RULE 10. The Sun-Telegraph reserves the right to reject any solution which is not submitted in accordance with these rules and to correct typographical or other errors which may appear inadvertently in any announcement concerning this contest or any publication of these rules. Upon the completion of one (1) weekly contest, the rules which are to govern a subsequent weekly contest may be altered or amended by the Sun-Telegraph at any time prior to the publication of the pictures in such subsequent weekly contest.

RULE 11. The Sun-Telegraph will not be responsible for the loss of any set or weekly group of pictures and answers submitted in this contest and all such sets or groups of pictures and answers submitted shall become the property of the Sun-Telegraph. No sets or groups of pictures and answers will be returned to any contestant. The Sun-Telegraph shall be under no obligation to answer any inquiries, by letter, telephone, or otherwise, concerning any weekly contest or the results thereof or any award therein.

AUTO CHECKUP ADVISED FOR SPRING DRIVING

Proper Attention Now Means Smooth Operation During Summer Season

After short and slow running under winter conditions a thorough checkup of the car is advisable at this time in order to guarantee a spring and summer of carefree operation.

Assuming that the car has come through a winter's service in fairly good mechanical shape the service operation should proceed in this order:

First, clean the engine, chassis and body thoroughly.

Check to see that the spring clips are tight; take up any excess play of spring shackles.

Clean and grease steering gear; check front wheel alignment, after adjusting the wheel bearings and filling the hub caps with fresh grease; see that the nuts holding the rear wheels to the axle are tight and fastened with a cotter pin.

DRAIN OLD OIL

Drain the old oil from the transmission and rear end, and put about a quart of kerosene or flushing oil in each.

Put a couple of handfuls of sal soda in the radiator and run the car for a few miles until it is well warmed up. The soda cleans out the scale and rust in the radiator while the kerosene will loosen and wash out the old oil in the transmission and differential. Drain these as soon as you stop, then drain the water from the radiator and flush with fresh water.

Remove the cylinder head and scrape out all the carbon and grind the valves. Now a new gasket when you put back the head—it makes a better job and no chance of leaks.

New rubber hose on all the water connections is well worth while, too. Fill the radiator with fresh water and start the engine. Run slowly till warmed up. Valve tappets should be adjusted, motor being warm while this is being done.

Oil the starting motor and generator, and check for proper summer charging rate.

Clean the breaker points in the distributor and set them to their opening. Clean the spark plugs and set gap according to car instruction book. To clean spark plugs simply fill the lower part of the plug with alcohol and allow to stand for a few seconds; take a piece of wire covered with one thickness of cloth and rub the carbon from the insulator, then wipe clean and dry thoroughly before replacing in the engine. Clean sparking points with emery cloth or a knife.

CLEAN IGNITION

Clean off all the ignition wires and see that the contacts are tight. Clean the storage battery with ammonia water or ordinary baking soda (1 teaspoonful to 1 cup of water), tighten the terminals and coat them with vaseline or grease. Check the liquid level and add distilled water if necessary.

Examine the fan belt; if it is worn, install a new one.

In the bottom of the gas tank is a small drain plug. Remove it and drain out any water or dirt that has settled at the bottom of the tank. Clean the fuel strainer and the carburetor strainer, and tighten all connections.

Now we come to the finishing touches. Drain the old oil from the crankcase, flush, and fill with fresh oil. Replace the drain plugs on the differential and transmission and put in the proper amount of recommended grade of oil or gear compound. Renew the oil filter cartridge if it has been in use 10,000 miles. Clean and re-oil the air cleaner if it is the oilable type.

With these servicing items attended to you should have ahead of you a summer of carefree driving, free from all mechanical troubles and annoyances.

Oldsmobile Plants Speed Up Production

LANSING, Mich., March 14.—Oldsmobile factories here are working on an increased production schedule this month which will exceed that of last March, factory officials report. All departments are working full time, from eight to 10 hours a day, five days a week.

The increased March production is in line with the gains being made in retail sales, say Oldsmobile officials. Retail sales in February were approximately the same as those of February, 1930, and increases are being reported this month.

The February total represents an increase of 1,103 units over January sales. February production for March is expected to show approximately the same increase over February.

FRANKLIN'S BIG AD DRIVE OPENS

Practicing what he has preached for more than a quarter of a century, H. H. Franklin, president of the Franklin Automobile Company of Syracuse, N. Y., announces that beginning with March his company has released a broad advertising and demonstrating campaign.

In his announcement Mr. Franklin said:

"Education through advertising has made the automobile business. Advertising and hard effort will arouse public interest today as it has every year since the automotive industry began.

"Millions of motorists are driving obsolete cars today—cars that should be replaced with modern automobiles. Millions of motorists can afford to buy right now if convinced that they are getting highest value for their dollar.

"False economy dictates that a motorist try to get along for a little while longer with his old car.

"Realizing this we are placing as heavy schedules as possible with newspapers in March. We are backing this up with direct mail effort and magazine advertising. We are making a drive for more educational demonstrations in our campaign for the sole purpose of informing more people about recent original developments in the airplane, air-cooled car."

PENROSE CUP HERE

NEWSPAPER ADS AID BUICK SALES

With newspaper display advertising columns holding a dominant position, the Buick Motor Company recently completed a nation-wide intensive advertising campaign to inform the country that the present line of Buick straight eights will not be replaced with new models this summer.

The success of this campaign, which embraced the use of about 2,000 daily and weekly newspapers, is already evident in increased sales and inquiries reaching the factory, according to E. J. Poag, assistant general sales manager in charge of advertising. He said:

"How successfully the newspapers fulfilled their mission in this instance is evident in the increased sales reported during the weeks that have followed the advertising campaign. Thousands of Buick owners, who formerly waited until the presentation of the new line during the summer months to make their purchases, took immediate advantage of this announcement to buy new Buicks now."

WILLYS AGENCY SHOWS TROPHY

The Penrose trophy, which goes annually to the winner of the Pikes Peak climb staged each year on Labor Day, will be on display all this week at the showrooms of the Rea-Seagert Company, 5800 Baum boulevard, distributors for Willys-Overland, Inc.

The noted trophy was won in the 1930 race up the famous mountain by a stock Willys six roadster against the largest field of cars ever entered in the event. The Willys six time of 24 minutes 18 1-5 seconds over the 12 1-3-mile climb established a new record for cars selling under $1,000.

The Pikes Peak race is recognized as a most gruelling power test. In addition to making the steady climb, cars are forced to negotiate more than two hundred curves, while the constantly changing altitude require the highest efficiency in carburetion.

Throughout the balance of the year the trophy will be exhibited in the showrooms of various Willys-Overland merchants throughout the country.

The up-curve in motor car output was continued unbroken during February, with total estimated production of 230,364 units, an increase of 29 per cent over the output for the preceding month.

FREE WHEELING EASE OF DRIVING SHOWN IN TEST

Hupmobile Quest for Facts Finds New Transmission Is 3-to-1 Energy Saver.

One of the outstanding advantages of free wheeling as adopted by Hupmobile in all of its new sixes and eights is the relief from driving strain. This is particularly noticeable in congested traffic, comments H. F. Gleason, Hupmobile distributor here. Tests conducted several weeks ago by the Hupp Motor Car Corporation reveal this benefit.

Because shifting from second to high speed and from high back to second speed while free wheeling at a rate above the engine idling speed may be accomplished without using the clutch, this test was directed at this particular operating phase of the new transmission.

Accurate mechanical counting instruments were installed on the floor boards of two Hupmobile eights so that every time the clutch pedal was released this movement was registered by the counting device. The two cars used included a new 100 horsepower Hupmobile Eight equipped with free wheeling and a similar model which did not have the new transmission.

The total distance driven was 57 miles. During this time the driver of the car with the conventional transmission was compelled to use his clutch 175 times, while the counter on the free wheeling car disclosed only 55 clutch pedal depressions.

In this 57 miles of driving over a composite route that included practically every kind of traffic congestion, the driver of the free wheeling Hupmobile saved 120 extra clutch releases at the expense of the other car. Thus clutch operation on the one car was three times as much as on the car equipped with free wheeling transmission.

FORD TOWN SEDAN

ATTRACTIVE—New Ford town sedan, which is being shown at the Ford branch and by many of the Ford dealers. It is one of the most attractive models yet produced by Ford.

FEBRUARY GAIN FOR CADILLAC

February shipments of the Cadillac Motor Car Company showed an increase of 13 per cent over those for the same period a year ago, according to factory figures just released to Royston Cadillac-LaSalle Company.

The April production schedule on the four lines of cars—LaSalle V-8, Cadillac V-8, Cadillac V-12, and Cadillac V-16—has been revised upward for the third time. This increase is directly the result of substantial improvement in sales during January and February, and of a forecast improvement for March. The April schedule now stands at 3,000 cars; having been revised from 2,200, 2,400 and 2,600. The March production schedule calls for 2,400 cars.

Love Stories the Ancients Believed In

By the Distinguished English Artist
Edmund Dulac

EUROPA AND ZEUS—

ZEUS was the great god of the old Greeks. The Romans called him Jupiter. He was extremely romantic, and had any number of love affairs. Being a god, he had a vast advantage over human lovers. It did anxious fathers no good to hide their attractive daughters, because Zeus could assume any shape he liked, and no locks or walls could keep him out. He admired Europa, the daughter of the King of Phoenicia, who tried to keep her safe from sweethearts by surrounding her day and night with dozens of the most beautiful maidens, on the theory that there is safety in numbers. But Zeus changed himself into a white bull. Encouraged by its amiability, Europa climbed on its back. As soon as she had mounted, the crafty god rushed into the sea and swam with her all the way to Crete, some hundreds of miles away. There he assumed his own shape, and their first son became the first Minos, or ruler of that rich island, which for several centuries ruled all the Mediterranean.

Girls of Japan Casting Aside Kimonos For American Baseball Togs

The Picturesque, but Bulky and Impractical Embroidered Kimono, Once the Standard Attire of Japanese Women, Is Giving Way to Modern Western Costumes and Athletic Togs. These Two Tokyo Girls Are Members of One of the Newly Formed Baseball Teams, on Their Way to Discard the Kimonos for Bloomers.

Baseball Has So Thoroughly Gripped the Japanese Nation That It Has Nearly as Many Fans as America. The Photo Shows Two Girl Players in a Pose Familiar to All Lovers of "The Great American Game."

Just as in America, the Two Opposing Team Captains Shake Hands Before and After the Contests.

FOR centuries the Geisha girls, with their colorful kimonos, wooden clogs and elaborate coiffures, stood for the cherished and [illegible]hanging traditions of Japan. It [illegible] supposed that they would be the [illegible] of the ancient institutions of the [illegible] of Cherry Blossoms to "go western."

Until about a year ago the Geishas did cling to tradition in the face of a surprising and rapid westernization of the Island Empire. While other Japanese girls discarded their kimonos for the fashions of Paris, London and New York, and bobbed their hair, the Geishas clung to their kimonos and their crowning glory.

With much misgiving they saw the patrons to whom they once served saki and amused by playing the samisen, deserting their gardens to dance in jazz palaces and eat in restaurants not unlike those to be found on New York's Broadway.

They decided that their only salvation was to outwesternize their less tradition-bound sisters, and having made the decision they "went modern" so courageously and so quickly that the older generation of Japan couldn't believe their eyes.

Not only did the Geishas substitute snappy cabaret and stage dances for their ancient modest posturings, they also adopted the athletic interests of the modern American girl and learned to play baseball for the amusement of the men who were finding the Geishas' gardens too dull and old-fashioned to be attractive.

Two of the photographs on this page were taken at a baseball game recently played by two teams of Geisha girls on one of the many diamonds that have sprung up in Tokyo. One of the pictures shows a feminine Babe Ruth, who has laid aside her samisen for a baseball bat, about to smash out a "Texas Leaguer." The other shows the captains of the competing teams shaking hands before the start of the game. The other picture shows two Geishas in traditional costume.

Many of the older men in Japan deplore this sudden change in the viewpoint and the behavior of the Geishas. They think it both indecent and sacrilegious for the young women to appear in public dressed in masculine attire.

The games between the Geisha teams are popular with the younger generation, both men and women, who admire the girls for their progressive spirit and their athletic ability. Incidentally, there are no other female baseball teams in Japan, although the Geishas have not been given a monopoly and may soon be faced with competition from other baseball clubs made up entirely of young women.

Because the Geishas are required by custom to keep themselves in good physical condition, they have developed into exceptionally good ball players and some of them compare favorably with male stars at swatting home runs and running bases. Their best pitchers boast a repertoire of curves, fast balls and slow balls that would baffle many a masculine batter.

Loudspeakers Replace Auto Horns

INSPIRED by the radio and the talkies, P. W. Hill of Wednesbury, England, discarded the horn on his automobile and installed a microphone and loudspeaker, which made his machine "England's first talking motor car."

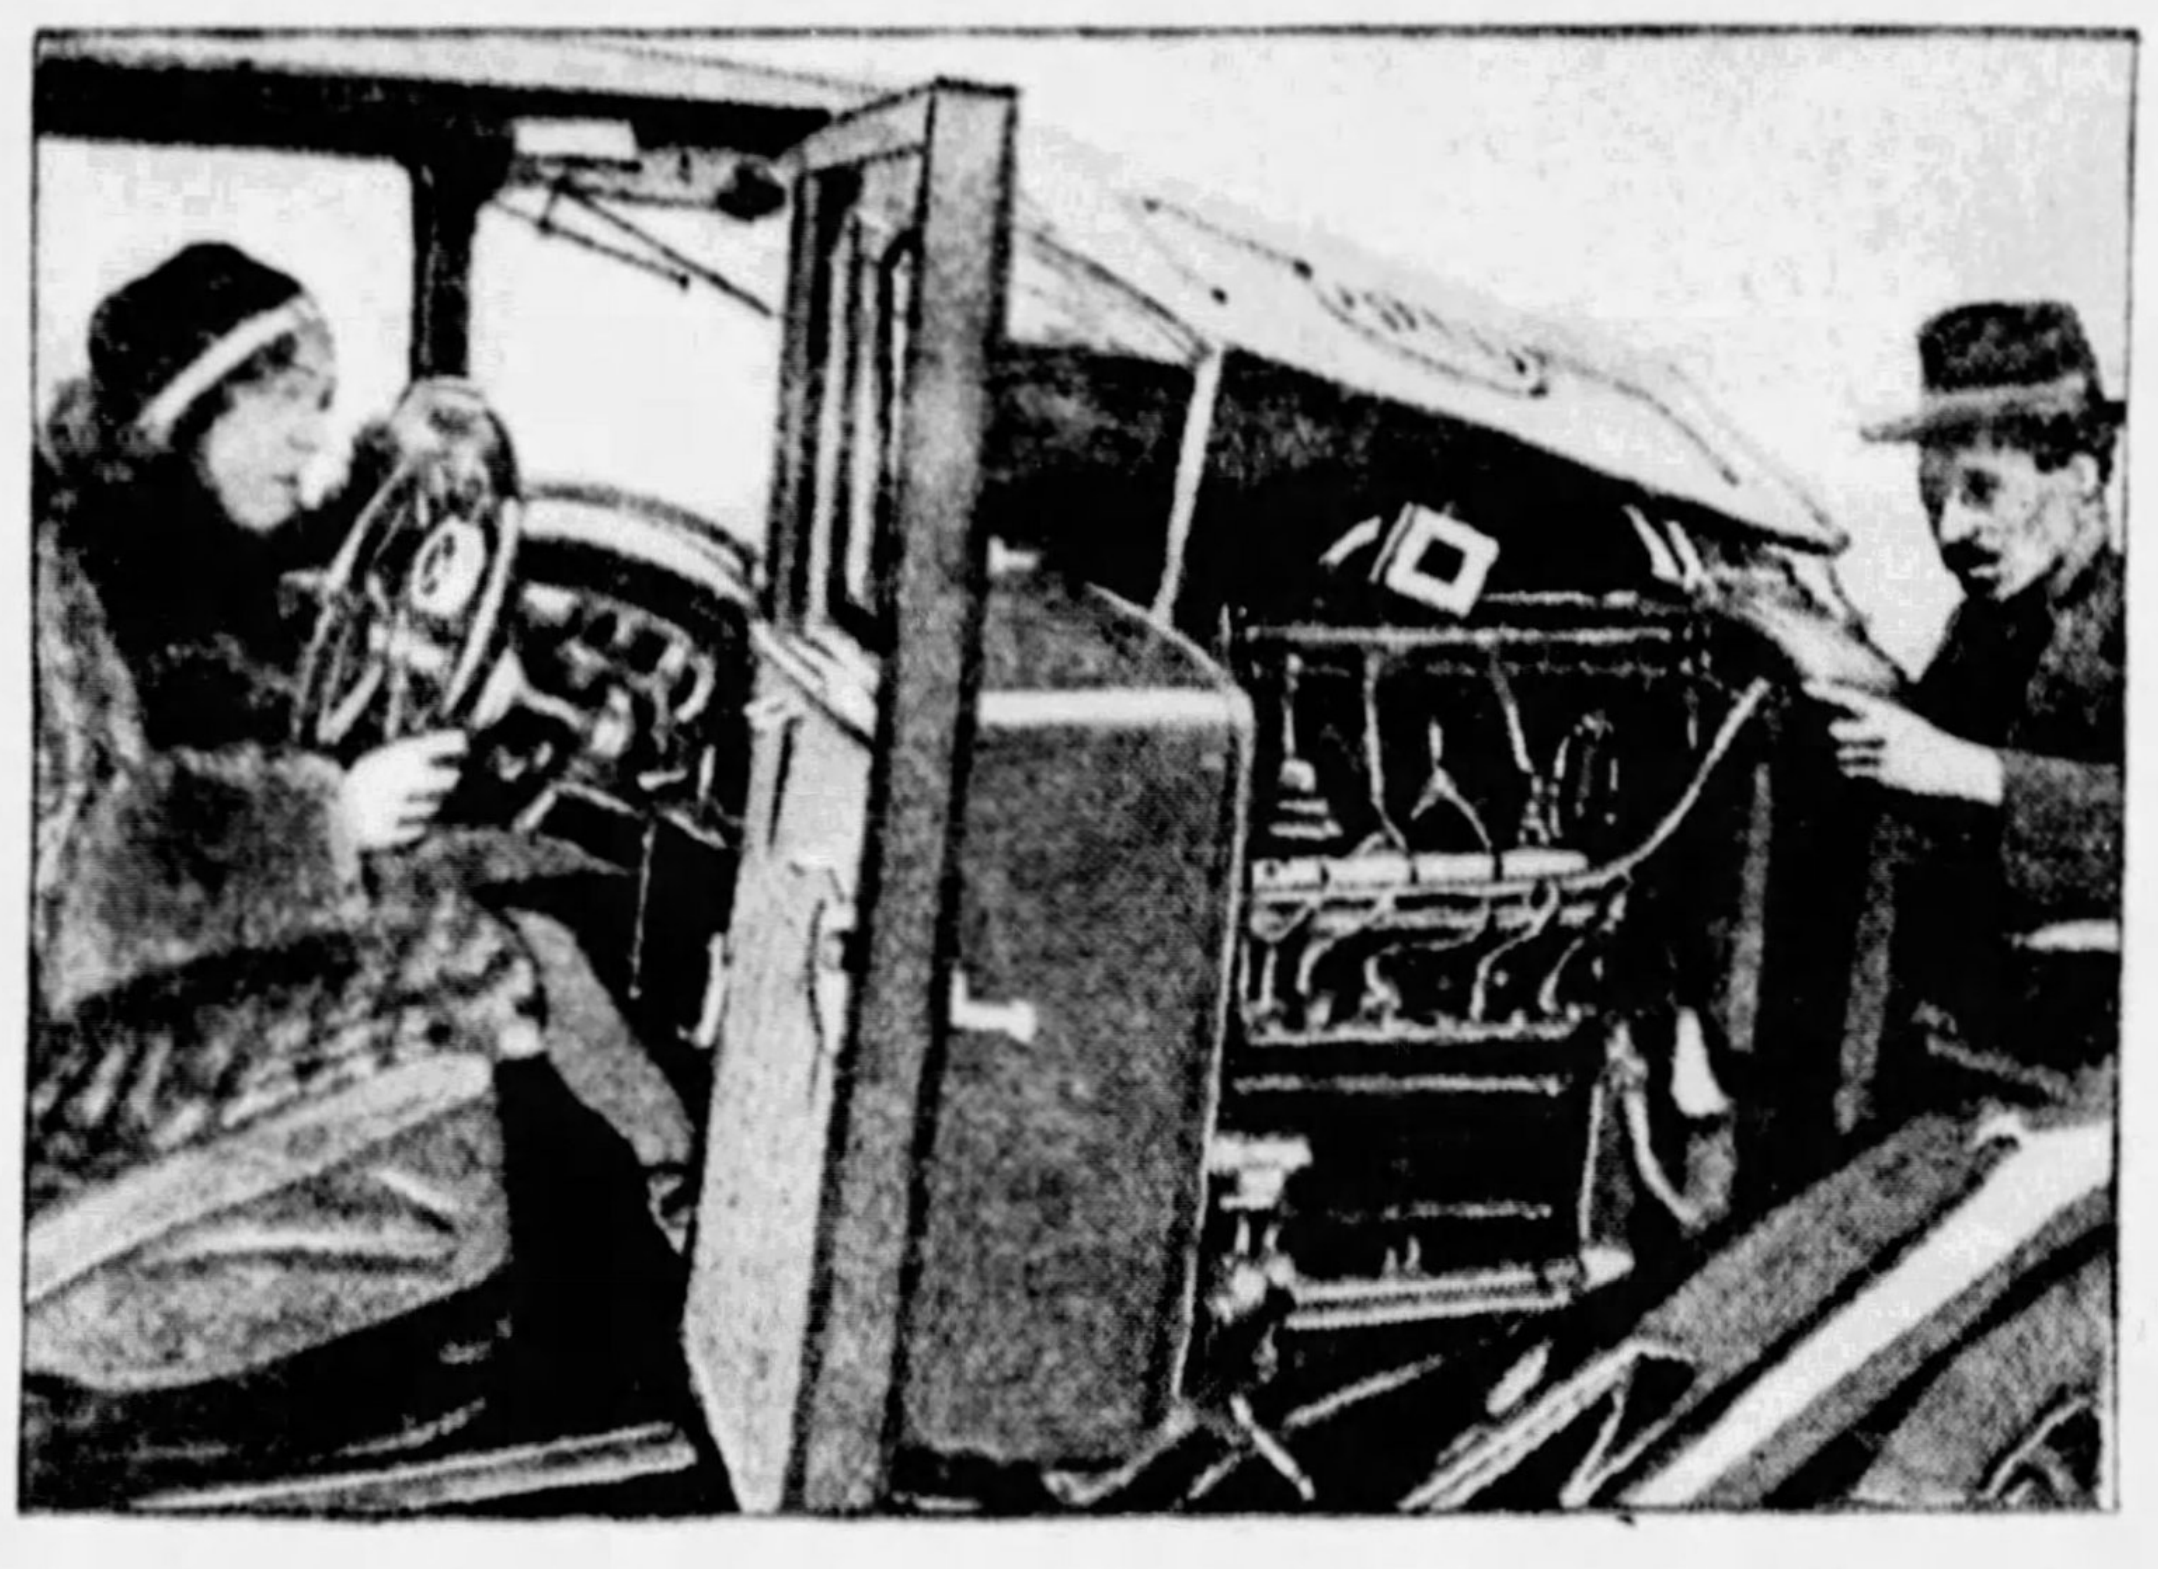
The microphone is on the steering wheel so that the driver can talk into [illegible]hout taking his eyes off the road [illegible]he traffic. The tiny loudspeaker [illegible]ched under the hood so that the [illegible] "broadcast" from it can be [illegible] heard through the radiator. The device is so made that the driver's voice is amplified. If he speaks into the microphone in an ordinary voice his words come out of the loudspeaker with sufficient volume to be heard twenty or thirty feet away.

At first, Mr. Hill's neighbors looked upon his talking motor car as an ingenious and amusing joke, but his up-to-date method of warning pedestrians, cyclists and other motorists worked so well that one English manufacturer of automobiles is considering equipping all his machines with a similar device. The idea, of course, is not patentable, and many motorists have replaced their horns with microphones and loudspeakers since the Wednesbury man got the very sensible idea.

If he encounters a motorist who insists on taking more than his share of the highway he leans toward the microphone on the wheel and the offender is startled to hear an automobile asking him, "Pull over where you belong. Do you want all the road?" The usual reaction is prompt compliance with the established rules of the road.

The device permits the driver to inform other drivers when he is about to make a turn, slow down or stop. It also enables him to ask information about routes and road conditions without moving from his seat or opening a window.

Mr. Hill advises other users of the loudspeaker not to use the thing to talk back to traffic cops. He did and nearly got himself haled into court.



Instead of the Ordinary Auto Horn, a Few English Cars are Now Equipped as Shown in the Photo With a Microphone at the Steering Wheel, and a Loudspeaker Under the Hood. The Driver Can Thus Shout to Other Drivers and Even to Traffic Policemen, Which Isn't Half as Dangerous in England as in America.

A Plant That Builds Colonies

THE person with a smattering of knowledge about the vegetation that covers the earth probably thinks that the largest plants that grow—including trees—are the giant redwoods of California of the Eucalyptus trees of Tasmania, which tower 200 feet in the air and have trunks that are branchless for 120 feet.

These would be good guesses, but they would be incorrect. The largest plant on earth is a little known and extremely rare evergreen shrub popularly called the box huckleberry, a branch of which recently was presented to the Field Museum in Chicago by Prof. Stanley F. Cain of Butler University.

The box huckleberry, strangely enough, rises scarcely six inches above the ground. But it trails over the ground, forming great mats or colonies. There are in this country single box huckleberry plants which have been growing for hundreds of years and which cover areas as large as 100 acres. As its name indicates, the box ruckleberry is a relative of the common huckleberry, and of the blueberry. It, too, bears fruit which is good to eat.

Until Prof. Cain came upon the specimen which he gave to the Field Museum, it was supposed that the biggest plant grew only in Delaware, West Virginia, Virginia and Pennsylvania. But he discovered this plant near Rugby, Tennessee, more than a hundred miles west of any place that the rare plant had previously been found.

Beside the box huckleberry, the redwood and the eucalyptus are tiny plants and the sago palms of the tropics, which grow leaves more than forty feet long, are tiny growths of vegetation hardly worth mentioning. It is fortunate, the scientists say, that the box huckleberry is rare, or it might try to overrun whole States.

Perpetuating the Memory of the Old Pony Express in New California Museum

IN the days before America was spanned by telegraph wires, railroads and, many years later, telephone lines, the hardy and courageous riders of the Pony Express were the chief means of communication between the Missouri River and the Pacific Coast.

Many books have been written about the exploits of these couriers who galloped over 2,000 miles of desert and mountain, through forest and river to keep the pioneers of the Great West and the folks "back East" in touch with each other. These written records of one of the most colorful chapters in the history of the United States—or any other country—are rich in true stories of hair-raising rides through great stretches of wild, uninhabited country infested with warlike Indians and of dramatic battles not only with the bloodthirsty Redmen, but with bandits and with the unrelenting elements.

But it has remained for the citizens of California to preserve, in Pasadena, a completely equipped Pony Express station just as it was in 1860, when the first express rider galloped out of Sacramento with a saddle bag filled with letters to be carried in relays of riders to St. Joseph, Missouri, and from there by train to the East.

This interesting building is called the Pony Express Museum. From its crude barroom to the smallest of its copper kettles it is exactly as such structures were in the days of when the carrying of mail and news from coast to coast in fourteen days was looked upon as more of an achievement in speed than a twelve-hour airplane flight over the same route is regarded today.

The building has been restored with a painstaking regard for historical accuracy. Most of the relics in it actually were used by express riders, the station agents and pioneers who lived in California in those stirring times. These relics include rifles, pistols, saddles, saddle bags and even some of the old letters with the official Pony Express stamp on them. The visitor to the museum does not find it difficult to imagine himself a resident of the "Golden West" of more than 70 years ago.

Before the opening of the Pony Express line in April, 1860, it sometimes took months for a settler in California to communicate with his family in the East, for the railroad had pushed no further west than St. Joseph, Missouri, which became, of course, the eastern terminal of the Pony Express.

With the advent of the Pony Expres, with its 190 stations, 500 fast horses and 80 crack riders, a 14-day mail service was established between New York City and Sacramento, California. Later, when the telegraph had been extended to St. Joseph, it was possible to transmit a message from coast to coast in the then amazing time of 10 days.

History records that the riders of the Pony Express, in the two years of the enterprise's existence, covered 650,000 miles on horseback and lost only one bag of mail, despite the constant battle of the riders with Indians, bandits and the elements. Soon after the completion of the first transcontinental telegraph line in the fall of 1861, the Pony Express became one of the glorious traditions of the "Wild West" which the museum in Pasadena will help to perpetuate.

Singular Dual Personality of the Abbé Turmel

RENNES, France, March 4.

THE worthy church people of this ancient city, some 240 miles from Paris, are stunned at the recent excommunication by the Holy Office at Rome of Joseph Turmel, former Abbe of the old Carmelite Chapel here. For the past forty years Abbe Turmel has devoutly said Mass each morning and directed the consciences of the parishioners—and during the same forty years, after his day of piety and worthy labors, he has retired to his study and labored far into the night, writing pamphlets and books attempting to disprove the doctrines of the Church and to deny the existence of God.

The Abbe published his atheistical works under fifteen pseudonyms—Louis Coulange, Henri de la Fosse, Armand Dulac, Antoine Dupin, etc., etc. No stranger example of what modern science recognizes as "dual personality" has come to public notice in France. The venerable clergyman was held in highest respect, was a man of unimpeachable honesty, probity and the highest standards of morality and personal conduct. He listened to the troubles and perplexities of his parishioners with kindly human sympathy and held the grateful appreciation of thousands, young and old, who had been led out of their difficulties by his wholesome spiritual guidance.

In the morning, as the Abbe entered the Chapel for his early Mass, he seemed to absorb a holy zeal from the atmosphere and surroundings of the old Church. And all through the day at his official functions or in his work among his devoted flock he seemed to reflect a saintliness of manner and of speech which endeared him to all those who knew him.

But after the evening services the venerable Abbe retired to the seclusion of his study — and became a changed man. Unlocking a secret drawer in his desk, the key to which he always carried on his person, he drew forth his writing materials and unfinished manuscripts and worked far into the night, setting forth arguments to disprove and deny all that he had said during the day in his capacity as leader of his flock.

While during the day he taught reliance on God in man's perplexities and extremities—yet in the seclusion of his study he wrote arguments endeavoring to prove that the conception of a Divine Father was illogical and contrary to every evidence. Although he brought peace of mind to his flock by assuring them of the tender interest in every one of them by the Divine Father—yet, in his writings, he pointed out that God, if there was one, displayed not the slightest interest in mankind, since He permitted the blind forces of nature to destroy the worthy as well as the unworthy and to spread disease, misery and tribulation among the innocent.

In his daily ministrations, the Abbe begged those in trouble to seek divine aid in prayer; and at night, with the vehemence of an adversary fighting a case in court, the Abbe argued the utter futility of prayer and undertook to prove his thesis by case after case where the prayers of multitudes of the devout had been ignored. Especially, the Abbe pointed out, the Protestant conception of an all-wise deity was in itself incompatible with the theory of intercession by prayer. If, in His infinite wisdom, God knew that what was about to happen was for the best, then God would be wrong if, as a concession to prayer, that which was best and wisest was in any way modified.

The continuous output of atheistic works had attracted the attention of Church authorities and investigation raised the suspicion, incredible though it seemed, that they might have come from the pen of the Abbe at Rennes. Indeed, as far back as 1892 suspicions of the clergyman resulted in his being deprived of his chair in dogmatic theology at the Rennes seminary. He denied the accusation of having written irreligious articles under other names and in a letter to Cardinal Dubourg he vigorously resented the charge.

Then the Church, deeming him repentant, turned its attention to other matters. But recently it was discovered that beyond any doubt the Abbe, instead of reforming, had continued reviling the Church and denying the divinity of Christ and the existence of God. As in the past, he was still hiding his written attacks under numerous fictitious names.

The strangest feature of the case was that the Abbe Turmel protested his innocence, emphatically denying that he was the author of these free-thinking publications. Last Fall, brought to trial before the ecclesiastic court of the diocese of Rennes, he refused to confess, even when M. de Brocard, handwriting expert of the Tribunal of the Seine, identified various manuscripts scientifically as his. Cardinal Charost adjured him to tell the truth, reminded him of the gravity of his offense, and forbade him to celebrate Mass and administer the sacraments if he did not retract. The case was referred to Rome.

Then a decree of the Holy Office at Rome, dated November 10, 1930, and signed by Mgr. Ange Subrizi, notary of the Supreme Sacred Congregation of the Holy Office, pronounced Abbe Joseph Turmel excommunicated and "vitandus"—a person to be shunned.

"This modernist priest," said the pontifical edict, "all the while pretending to submit to ecclesiastical authority, continued, these 40 years, to publish, under different pseudonyms, works gravely heretical and blasphemous, of which he has finally been shown to be the author by irrefutable proofs. All these books and articles appearing under so many various names and professing openly heresy and impiety led people to suspect that an equal number of priests were in revolt against the Catholic faith, a thing which constitutes a grave and manifest injury to French clergy."

Today Joseph Turmel is regarded as a moral leper by the faithful. His malady is so dangerously and mysteriously infectious that no one dare go safely near him. No longer is he allowed to assist at any religious service, and communicants are warned to avoid him as a "near occasion of sin."

Interviewed in his home at 2 Rue Waldeck-Rousseau, Rennes, the ex-Abbe declared that for 40 years he had devoted his life to the study of Scriptural texts.

"I am a student (je suis un homme d'etudes). I retract nothing in my writings," he said, "I will make no amende honorable. I hold to my scientific convictions. I consider that the evolution of religion is necessary and inevitable."

The anathematized cleric, who is more than 70 years old, is bent with years of study. His emaciated features are those of an ascetic, and his eyes flash with an unnatural fire.

"I am going to keep on working," he said, "just as I have worked for 40 years, because from now on I have my living to make. Hereafter I shall sign everything I write with my own name."

The "Histoire du Diable" (History of the Devil), is his latest volume, and the title page bears the name Joseph Turmel. It has just been put out by "Les Editions Rieder," a publication house (7 Place Saint-Sulpice, Paris), which lies in the shadow of the great Church of Saint-Sulpice. After 286 pages, in which the unfrocked priest tells the story of the Prince of Darkness, he concludes by saying that Satan today is without employment, that his majesty has no "raison d'etre," and that, because of the progress of science, he is condemned "a rentrer dans le neant" (to pass into oblivion).

Perhaps the book which gave most offense to the religious-minded was the "Catechisme pour Adultes," which Turmel wrote under the pseudonym of Coulange. Here, after enumerating the dreadful plagues that scourge mankind, he mocks at a "benevolent" deity.

"God," he says, "has no idea of justice as we understand it. Genesis tells us that God made man after his own image. It is, on the contrary, humanity that has fashioned the gods after its image. Man has made them violent, fantastic, sensual. Then along came the philosophers, who undertook to purify the dreams of humanity and to adapt them to the laws of logic. And from these manipulations issued God, the Creator."

People have tried to explain the former Abbe's 40-year fight against religion by the loss of his chair in the seminary at Rennes, but they forget that during these long years Joseph Turmel lived the most exemplary life, piously performed his Church duties, administered to a convent of nuns and admonished his hearers to put their faith in the goodness of God, and the Church. It was only at night, on retiring to his study, that his nature suddenly changed and he penned his incendiary diatribes against the deity.

The duality of the human soul has long attracted the attention of scientists. The case of Joseph Turmel is by no means unique in nature. Everything has its precedent. Books on physiology and psychology speak of Felida. This young woman of Bordeaux lived two lives in one, a double life that was sad when she lived one of her two existences, and gay when she returned to the other, to the astonishment of the savants who had her under observation. Dr. Azam, professor of the Faculty of Medicine at Bordeaux, and an expert on hypnotic subjects, has associated his name with this extraordinary woman.

Myers declares man is dual. He shows that man's ego is made up of two egos, the "supraliminal," which is conscious of everything, and the "subliminal," which is unconscious, which lives an obscure and independent life. These technical words have passed into the current language of the day.

"I had nothing to do with it," said Mozart to those who complimented him on one of his sonatas. It was an unconscious self that dictated a masterpiece to his normal self. Schopenhauer speaks of certain moments in his life when his will seemed to be dormant, when his mind was driven in an unexpected direction. "My personality," said the pessimistic philosopher, "was a stranger to work." When certain of his books were given to him he asked, "Was it I who wrote that?"

Socrates took counsel of and followed the guidance of his "daimon." The Romans had their "genii," or attending spirits. The Norsemen believed that every man had his "flygja" follower, a spirit intimately related to him and that died when he did. The idea of a Companion Spirit has been christianized into that of the Guardian Angel. Saint Bernard says in one of his sermons: "Whenever you perceive that you are sorely tempted, and that a great trouble menaces, invoke your guardian, your teacher, your helper."

Caesarius of Heisterbach observes that to every man pertains a good, but also a bad angel. Although the "doppelganger," as the Germans call him, has been melted into the Guardian Angel, he has for all that retained his identity. In the Middle Ages, a man with a dual personality would have been thought possessed; in him they would have seen the hand of the Evil One, the "signum diaboli." Today a dual personality can be observed in a repulsed lover who turns severely on his adored one. Hate is hidden in love. Sometimes the greatest patriots have become traitors and fought against their native land: —Alcibiades at Athens, Coriolanus at Rome and the Connetable de Bourbon and General Moreau in France are examples.

Luther wrote that the Devil gives the soul hideous thoughts, the hate of God, blasphemy and despair, and he tells how at the Wartburg Satan attacked him in his study at night, often making him doubt if there was a God. Many are the philosophers who believed that two rival Powers fight for man's soul — the Principle of Evil and the Principle of Good, the God of Light and the God of Darkness. The case of Gilles de Rais is classic. This gallant soldier and good Christian turned step by step into a monster of impiety and lust, of cruelty and cowardice. At Tiffanges, Brittany, he was surrounded by a staff of canons, vicars, deacons and choir-boys; he adored sacerdotal ornaments and Church music; yet he composed a treatise on the art of calling up demons, and Michelet has told at length of his almost incredible crimes and debauches.

Many writers have been fascinated by the enigma of double existence: Poe in his "Berenice;" Dostoievski, in his "Confession of Stavroguine;" Sacher Masoch, in his "Fisher of Souls;" Stevenson, in "The Strange Case of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde;" Jules Claretie, in "I and the Other;" and Marcel Schwob in "Coeur Double."

Dual existences are not rare and there is the extraordinary case of Louis Vide, who had six distinct existences—six temperaments—six characters. His case was studied by Bourru and Burot. Miss Beauchamp, a woman under the observation of Morton Prince, possessed three personalities. Ansel Bourne, whose case is described by Hodgson, had several distinct changes of personality, as spontaneous as the changes of the wind. They were instant transformations; speak to one personality—and it was another that answered you.

Inexplicable Mystery of Who Keeps Beating Up Poor Mr. Van Lone

ONE SUMMER night two years ago, Chris Van Lone, 59-year-old factory worker of Racine, Wis., was sitting in the home of Mrs. Ernest Osborn, his married daughter, when someone rapped at the back door. Mr. Van Lone opened the door, caught a brief glimpse of two eyes glaring from behind a black mask, sensed rather than saw the vicious swing of an arm, then collapsed under the impact of a terrific blow on the head. Thus began a fantastic mystery that has thrown the Wisconsin city into a turmoil and aroused the police department to unprecedented efforts, but the solution seems further away than ever.

Since that first assault, Van Lone has been clubbed seven times and stabbed twice. The most recent of these attacks was made a few weeks ago in the same way as the first beating up. Life for the victim has become a continual nightmare. Yet the aged man cannot suggest a single clue that might result in the capture of the phantom slugger. Despite an exhaustive investigation of the factory worker's health, habits, finances and family, the police have failed to pin the attacks on anyone. Van Lone has been driven to a hopeless acceptance of what he has come to regard as his fate.

"It wouldn't be so bad if they'd put a bullet through my head. It's the suspense that's driving me insane," he says brokenly. "I never know when they will slug me next. I can't eat, sleep or work. The police have offered to give me a bodyguard, but I've refused. It's no use, they'll get me. It wouldn't do any good to move away. They'd find me."

Sometimes in a sudden frenzy of revolt the fingers of Mr. Van Lone's calloused hands work spasmodically as he shouts: "If only I could get my hands on them for a few minutes!"

The first of the attacks occurred shortly after Van Lone was estranged from his wife, who is his third partner in matrimony. Both still maintain separate residences. Last August a stranger attempted to force his way into Mrs. Van Lone's home but fled when she screamed. She told police she feared it was her husband's attacker, but could furnish no description of him.

Mrs. Van Lone declared that her husband was deeply jealous of her and had once attempted suicide. "We just couldn't get along," she explained. Van Lone insisted it was he who had forced the separation and had told his wife that they would have to live apart.

A month after the first assault, Van Lone went to a theatre, and an hour later pedestrians found him unconscious on a sidewalk. He had been attacked from behind. Police Chief H. C. Baker offered him a police escort after this attack, but Van Lone refused. He merely asked permission to carry a club.

Shortly after this episode, as Van Lone crossed a schoolyard at night, a mysterious assailant slashed his face with a knife from cheek bone to the throat. A week later he was stabbed in the side at the same spot. Each time he caught brief glimpses of the slugger, whom he described vaguely as "a tall young man wearing a mask and a gray felt hat pulled low over his eyes."

After the fourth attack the victim's son-in-law served as an armed bodyguard, following Van Lone wherever he went and changing his clothes from day to day in the hope of deceiving the old man's enemy—or enemies. Detectives trailed Van Lone for weeks. They made him pass spots where he had been previously assaulted, but with almost occult cunning the clubber avoided all traps set for him.

Now thoroughly terrified, Mrs. Osborn and her husband fled the house her father shared with them and moved to Rockford, Ill. Van Lone continued to live in the home which is a block from a much traveled and brilliantly lighted street.

In the first year of this living nightmare, Van Lone was slugged four more times. Each time it was the same story. He would be walking along the street, there would be the swift patter of stealthy footsteps, a numbing blow on the head, and he would slump to the sidewalk. Once he was attacked as he walked across an empty lot a short distance from his home. Though he often carried small amounts of money with him, no effort ever was made to rob him.

Suddenly the attacks ended as mysteriously as they had begun. At about this time a police lieutenant and a detective who were trying to solve the mystery arrested Charles Wespetat, a son of Mrs. Van Lone by a former marriage, on a charge of attempting to murder a Racine policeman while escaping in a stolen car. He was sentenced to three to seven years in the Green Bay reformatory. He was questioned concerning the assaults, but could not be definitely connected with them.

Almost a year passed, and the police breathed a collective sigh of relief. The phantom slugger had apparently disappeared for good. Then, a few weeks ago, Van Lone answered a rap on his back door. Eyes gleamed from behind a black mask, a club swung viciously. Van Lone, his cheek laid open to the bone, glimpsed the tall form of the slugger as he toppled to the doorstep, bleeding and stunned.

Since this most recent attack the police have questioned a man who lost his job after playing a prank on Van Lone, grilled members of a secret society from which Van Lone resigned when they refused to attend the funeral of the first Mrs. Van Lone, and queried a man to whom the victim of the mysterious attacks objected to as a son-in-law.

None of these investigations have thrown any light on the mystery and Van Lone, whose housekeeper has departed for less nerve-wracking parts, is left alone to await the next violent visit of his unknown enemy.

The "Bootleg Queen" of Wichita, Where Carrie Nation Once Reigned

WHEN Carrie Nation launched her crusade against the saloon at Wichita, Kan., 30 years ago, she probably did not dream that the control of the liquor traffic in that community would be taken from the hands of men and placed within the delicate hands of a refined, good-looking girl, who, until recently, is said to have ruled the bootlegging racketeers of Wichita.

Carrie Nation first broke into national notice in 1901, when she smashed the Carey Hotel bar, then Wichita's most pretentious liquor-dispensing establishment, and hurled the hatchet, which later was to become famous, at the painting, "Cleopatra at the Bath," which hung over the bar. She went to jail for that act, but it made her a national figure, and it started the militant anti-saloon attack, which is said to have had much to do with the eventual adoption of the Eighteenth Amendment.

Today another woman is in a Wichita jail for starting a crusade, but this time it is an anti-prohibition crusade. The woman is Grace Davis, 25, the "Bootleg Queen" of Wichita.

The thirty years which have elapsed between Carrie Nation's first raid and the present day, find Wichita in possession of two relics of those hectic days. One is a monument to the memory of the hatchet-hurling crusader. The other is Mrs. Nation's lieutenant, Mrs. Myra McHenry, 82, withered, and growing feeble from age, but still vociferous in her attacks on public men whom she considers delinquent in their enforcement of the prohibition law.

Mrs. McHenry holds public meetings every week on the street corners, and her vitriolic tongue is celebrated all over Kansas. She was with Carrie Nation when the first raids were made, and she never fails to tell every listener of them at every opportunity.

Wichita is now a city of 125,000 people, three times as populous as it was in Carrie Nation's day, and while it officially frowns upon the liquor industry, those who visit it from the four corners of the nation speak of it as the "souse center" of Kansas. The pendulum, started on its arc by Carrie Nation, seems to be swinging in the opposite direction.

That's why the recent arrest of Grace Davis aroused no little public indignition. Grace, according to charges made by the police, maintained a "Court of Bacchus" at a hotel apartment house, where thirsty Wichitans found ready welcome when they went in for illegal jollification.

While Grace did not maintain a bar, she kept a plentiful supply of contraband there, police say, and her "friends" were always sure to find her a delightful hostess. From this apartment, officers charge, she gave the orders which sent a city-wide network of booze distillers, salesmen and deliverers into action. She disarmed suspicion by her pleasant personality, her beautiful clothes, and her ability to converse about the latest books, the newest fads, and the other things which smart Wichita women talk about.

To those who counted themselves among her good friends, and who take no interest in the so-called "noble experiment" of national prohibition, she was a charming, cultured young woman. Seldom did they mention her name in connection with anything as dark and unlawful as the liquor racket. And many "drys" who had heard rumors of her business interests either disbelieved or ignored these rumors because they found Grace Davis so attractive.

So successful was Grace in lulling all suspicion as to her "business" that she was a frequent and popular guest in some of the city's best homes. Her direction of her racketeering lieutenants was largely by telephone, it is said, and many of the men whom she ordered to come and go with their liquor supplies never saw her.

Her downfall came when a Government agent, who had been introduced as "right" by one of Grace's lieutenants, persuaded her to sell him a gallon of whiskey. Her arrest followed.

News that the "Queen" had been jailed caused a break-up of her gang here, police say. Although all their efforts to get her to reveal the names of her associates have been fruitless, agents report that many men believed to be linked with her have left the city since her arrest.

And so her royal highness was dragged from her court to a cell in the city jail, where, bereft of all royal prerogatives and deserted by her subjects, she faced a long string of charges which may send her to the penitentiary.

How the London Restaurants Are Turning Into "Day Clubs" to Compete With Night Life Rivals

THE owners of some of the more expensive London restaurants have viewed with alarm the growing tendency of many of their patrons to economize on their luncheon checks by eating at cheaper and less pretentious places.

Some of the restaurateurs attempted to bring back their lost trade by scaling down their prices and offering food less costly to buy and prepare. Others, who preferred to meet the depression by making their establishments more attractive to customers, replaced male waiters with pretty waitresses with soft voices and pleasant smiles. Still others engaged small orchestras and filled their eating emporiums with soothing melody, both modern and classical.

But the man who exercised the most ingenuity in luring his dwindling clientele back to his tables—and who seems to be most successful at the job—took his cue from the capital's night clubs which continue to flourish in the face of increasing economic depression.

After making a round of the more popular dine-and-dance places and learning that the food served at most of them was no better than that set before his own customers, he arrived at the conclusion that the widely advertised "tired business man" does not object to paying a fair—and even exorbitant price—for his meals if he can feast his eyes on pretty and shapely girls while he eats his roast beef and sips his tea.

Every one of the night clubs that are filled night after night provide some sort of floor show in which the performers are, more often than not, comely chorines unable to find work in the theatres. Some of them sing and some of them dance. But every one of them is good to look upon and dressed in a costume both abbreviated and colorful.

Why not, the observing and enterprising restaurant man asked himself, make his establishment a sort of "day club" with some, if not all, of the glamorous appeal of the nocturnal eating places?

He went back to his place of business and carefully studied the layout of his dining-room. He could hardly afford to use any of the floor space as a dancing area because, in normal times, there barely was room for tables. He would not, he decided, attempt to put on a floor show. But he would borrow the main idea of the successful night clubs and brighten up his place with a few very pretty girls in costumes—or lack of costumes—that might appeal to the esthetic sense of the average business man, tired or otherwise.

The photograph illustrating this story shows how the founder of what has come in London to be called the "day club" solved his problem by keeping all his floor space for tables and providing a place for his scantily-clad chorines to circulate among the diners. He erected a narrow, rectangular runway on the order of those common in burlesque theatres, engaged his talent from a theatrical agency and, without closing his place for a day, surprised and delighted his customers with a spectacle that seemed to make them forget the prices on the menu.

Within a week most of his old customers, and more new ones than could be seated, flocked back to the restaurant. A gratifying percentage of the customers showed their appreciation of the restaurateur's efforts to beat depression by ordering his biggest and most expensive luncheons—in order to prolong their mid-day visit to the first of many "day clubs" that are springing up in London like mushrooms.

Her Face Once Her Fortune—Now Her Misfortune

Ivy Close, "Most Beautiful Woman in the World," Drops Down, Step by Step, From Movie Star to "Extra Girl" and Must Hide Her Features to Get a Day's Work

Miss Ivy Close, the Famous British Beauty, Called "The Most Beautiful Woman in the World," at the Height of Her Fame and Prosperity.

A Popular Photograph of Ivy Close, Widely Admired in England and on the Continent.

An Artistic Photograph of the Woman Who Was Voted the Most Perfect Type of English Beauty. The Judges in the Beauty Contest Were Impressed With Her Perfectly Balanced Features, Height of Forehead, Unobtrusive Ridges of Bone Over Her Eyes, Delicate Mouth and Highly Developed Chin.

LONDON, March 5.

MISS IVY CLOSE, who a few years ago won from a field of 200,000 British girls the title of "Most Beautiful Woman in the World," is today vainly haunting the motion picture studios in hope of picking up a few shillings as an "extra." Following her victory in the beauty contest, she starred on stage and screen and was eagerly sought after by society hostesses. Her face brought her fame, fortune and a happy marriage. Her portrait was "the picture of the year" at the Royal Academy. Her features adorned countless magazine covers and postcard studies of her were sold in millions. Today she is "down and out."

At the height of her film career she refused a flattering three-year contract by an American movie magnate. Later she was glad to go to America for a few months' work in slapstick comedies.

Now the reigning beauty of bygone days cannot get regular work even "in the crowd," as extra work is called over here, in the studios that exploited her as the most beautiful woman in the world. Once she was billed as a music hall headliner from one end of England to the other. Now she has trouble even in getting small parts in the minor companies that tour the provinces.

Miss Close attributes her failure now to get movie work to the fickle public's demand for new faces and new types. But other stars of her prosperous years are still featured in the British films and Ivy is glad now to play "in the crowd" with players who "supported" her in her days of glory.

When she won the British beauty contest, she was in great demand for opening bazaars and kicking off at football games, this being the British equivalent of tossing out the first ball in an important baseball game. When she opened bazaars, of course, those buying tickets had the privilege of gazing at close hand on her prize-winning features. Miss Close at this time had a foretaste of her future disaster on stage and screen.

She went to Leicester to open a big bazaar. Her picture appeared in all the papers and her lovely face gazed back at her from hundreds of billboards. The front of the bazaar was literally papered with huge portraits of her. The first day she noted the entrance fee was two shillings, six pence, about 60 cents. She proudly reflected that everyone in that vast crowd had paid sixty cents just to see her. The next day she was startled to find the admission cut to one shilling (24 cents) and the third day absolutely shocked to learn her public could gaze on her for six pence. Worse was to come, on the closing day the public was admitted for three pence, six cents in American money.

That, in brief, has been the whole story of her public career. From star she sank to smaller and smaller and smaller wages, until today she is not even wanted as an "extra" at the least pretentious studios.

Stage Photograph of Ivy Close as She Appeared in One of Her Theatrical Productions.

Two side-car motorcycle accidents figured prominently in Ivy's sudden rise to glory and tragic descent. By the first she was precipitated into fame and fortune; by the second she was brought to realize that her success had been founded on the bubble reputation of her youthful beauty.

Ivy Close was of North Country stock. When she was only 17, she left the convent where she had been educated and was taken to London by her family. One day she and her father were spilled out of the family motorcycle and her father injured so badly he was kept home from his jewelry business. He was an amateur photographer and spent part of his idle time in making pictures of his pretty daughter. He sent several of them secretly to a great beauty contest which was just then exciting all Great Britain. This was in the early years of beauty contests and they were still a novelty. Two hundred thousand girls were entered in the race.

Miss Close was picked for the semi-finals and was asked to submit a studio portrait of herself. She went to Elwin Neame's studio and met her future husband. Things were happening fast for the 17-year-old beauty. She won the contest to the satisfaction of everyone but the 199,999 disappointed contestants. Her portrait was painted by Arthur Hacker, A. R. A., and she won a second triumph when it was unanimously voted "the picture of the year" at the Royal Academy.

Stage offers now poured in on her and offers of marriage came by letter, wire, cable. She refused an offer by George Edwardes to be starred in the Gaiety Theatre Revue with Marie Studholme, Gladys Cooper and Gertie Millar. She feared the limelight, she said afterward, but this fear soon left her and she accepted an offer to sing in music halls at a salary startling to her. Crowds stormed the music halls at Manchester and Exeter to see and hear "the most beautiful woman in the world," as she was billed, but it soon became apparent she was far from the greatest prima donna and she abandoned music hall work.

When she tired of opening bazaars and kicking off at football games, she returned home and married her photographer, Mr. Neame. This was the occasion of more ballyhoo and hullabaloo. People stood in line a mile and a half from St. Mary's Church, Hendon, to see the beautiful bride. They chose the Royal Crescent Hotel at Brighton for the honeymoon, but it was more like a visit by royalty. Again her photographs were everywhere.

All this naturally led to a movie engagement. Her husband encouraged this career and later became her producer. Her first work was under the well-known British film pioneer, Cecil Hepworth, who was then starring Stewart Rome, Alma Taylor, Violet Hopson and Chrissie White, names well-known to English fans.

Ivy joined this celebrated company and appeared in such super-pictures as "The Lady of Shalott" and "The King and the Beggar Maid." She was taken to the Isle of Man to play opposite Derwent Hall Caine in the filming of his distinguished father's "Darby and Joan," under the personal supervision of Hall Caine.

These were the days of her greatest success. She was an intimate friend of Elsie Mackay, whose stage name was Poppy Wyndham, and who was later lost in an attempt to fly the Atlantic. She likes to tell of the time Ronald Colman, now one of the greatest Americna stars, was turned down in a screen test because "he wasn't a good screen type and not photographic."

When her husband launched out as a producer, she naturally headed his company. She refused the three-year contract of an American movie magnate, "at a salary to turn a cabinet minister green with envy," as she says, to remain in England.

Now came another lucky "break" for Ivy. Her first baby, Ronald, was born, and as the child of "the most beautiful woman in the world," it immediately became "the most photographed baby in the world." Ivy's life was full of superlatives then.

But soon her husband's pictures with her as star weren't going so well and she jumped at a chance to go to America with Kalem Films. After a carefully planned reception in New York City, she went to Florida to do slapstick comedies. When the custard pies gave out, the Kalem Company produced "thrillers" and Ivy had to slide down ropes from roofs, jump into fire nets and leap into rivers from swinging cranes. She soon returned to England.

But her star had begun to wane. For a time she obtained vamp roles in England, but finally had to take a minor part in Pathe Films in France. They tried to make a film on Mont Blanc in Switzerland, were marooned four days in a storm, swept away by an avalanche, and Ivy nearly slid off a precipice. She went back to England and retired from public life.

A year later her husband was killed in a side-car accident, her home and savings were eaten up in unsuccessful litigation and she was forced to seek stage work to support herself and two children. Then she learned the bitter truth that her former success had been due to her brief fame as a prize beauty and that she was forgotten by the public and no longer eagerly sought after by movie producers.

For the first time in her life, she had to earn her living. Her husband gone and her two children dependent on her, she found to her dismay she could not get a satisfactory job in the movies. New beauty contest winners had sprung up and usurped public attention. "New faces and types are wanted now; you won't do," she was told over and over again at the studios. In despair, she turned back to the stage. "What can you do?" she was asked at the agencies. She couldn't sing, she couldn't do anything. Her vogue as most beautiful woman had been forgotten. But she took dancing lessons and for a time toured the English provinces in a "Going Up" company. The next step downward was to a "panto," a small troupe giving pantomime performances. But that didn't last long. Her next "engagement" was as understudy to Miss Vera Pierce in "My Son John." Miss Pierce had surprisingly good health and Ivy never got a chance to show what she could do.

The next turn of the wheel found her a chorus girl in a London West End theatre. Here she worked regularly and was paid regularly, but she had reached the foot of the ladder—almost.

When she got a job with a German film company at $125 a week, she thought the wheel had turned the other way and she was finally on the way up. That $125 a week sounded awfully good, and would have been if she had gotten it. She went to Berlin and helped make one picture—about two weeks' work. Then she remained in her hotel waiting the call for her next picture. It didn't come and when she phoned the studio she was told that a "strike" was delaying production. She was supposed to be paid while she was waiting. She wasn't, and when she sued for her salary, the suit was put off for months.

Finally she was penniless and the British Consul paid her way back to England. She never heard any more about the suit and suspects she lost in the German courts. Back in London, she haunted the agencies and studios for months without getting work. "Sorry, nothing doing today. Come back later," she was told day after day. When she was offered a screen test at Elstree, near London, she had to pawn her wedding ring—her last possession—to pay her fare and buy a necessary pair of silk stockings. She failed to pass the test. A small part in a provincial drama company kept the wolf from the door for a while. Then back to London and the weary, hopeless round of the agencies and studios began again.

Occasionally she gets work "in the crowd" when a picture is filmed. But only when she is unrecognized. The stars who know her, although they might help her out with loans frequently, object to having her work as an extra in their films. They regard her as a jinx, a hoodoo, an omen of failure. So Ivy wanders from studio to studio, her only chance of getting a little work being to hide from the friends of her glorious and prosperous days the face that once thrilled thousands.

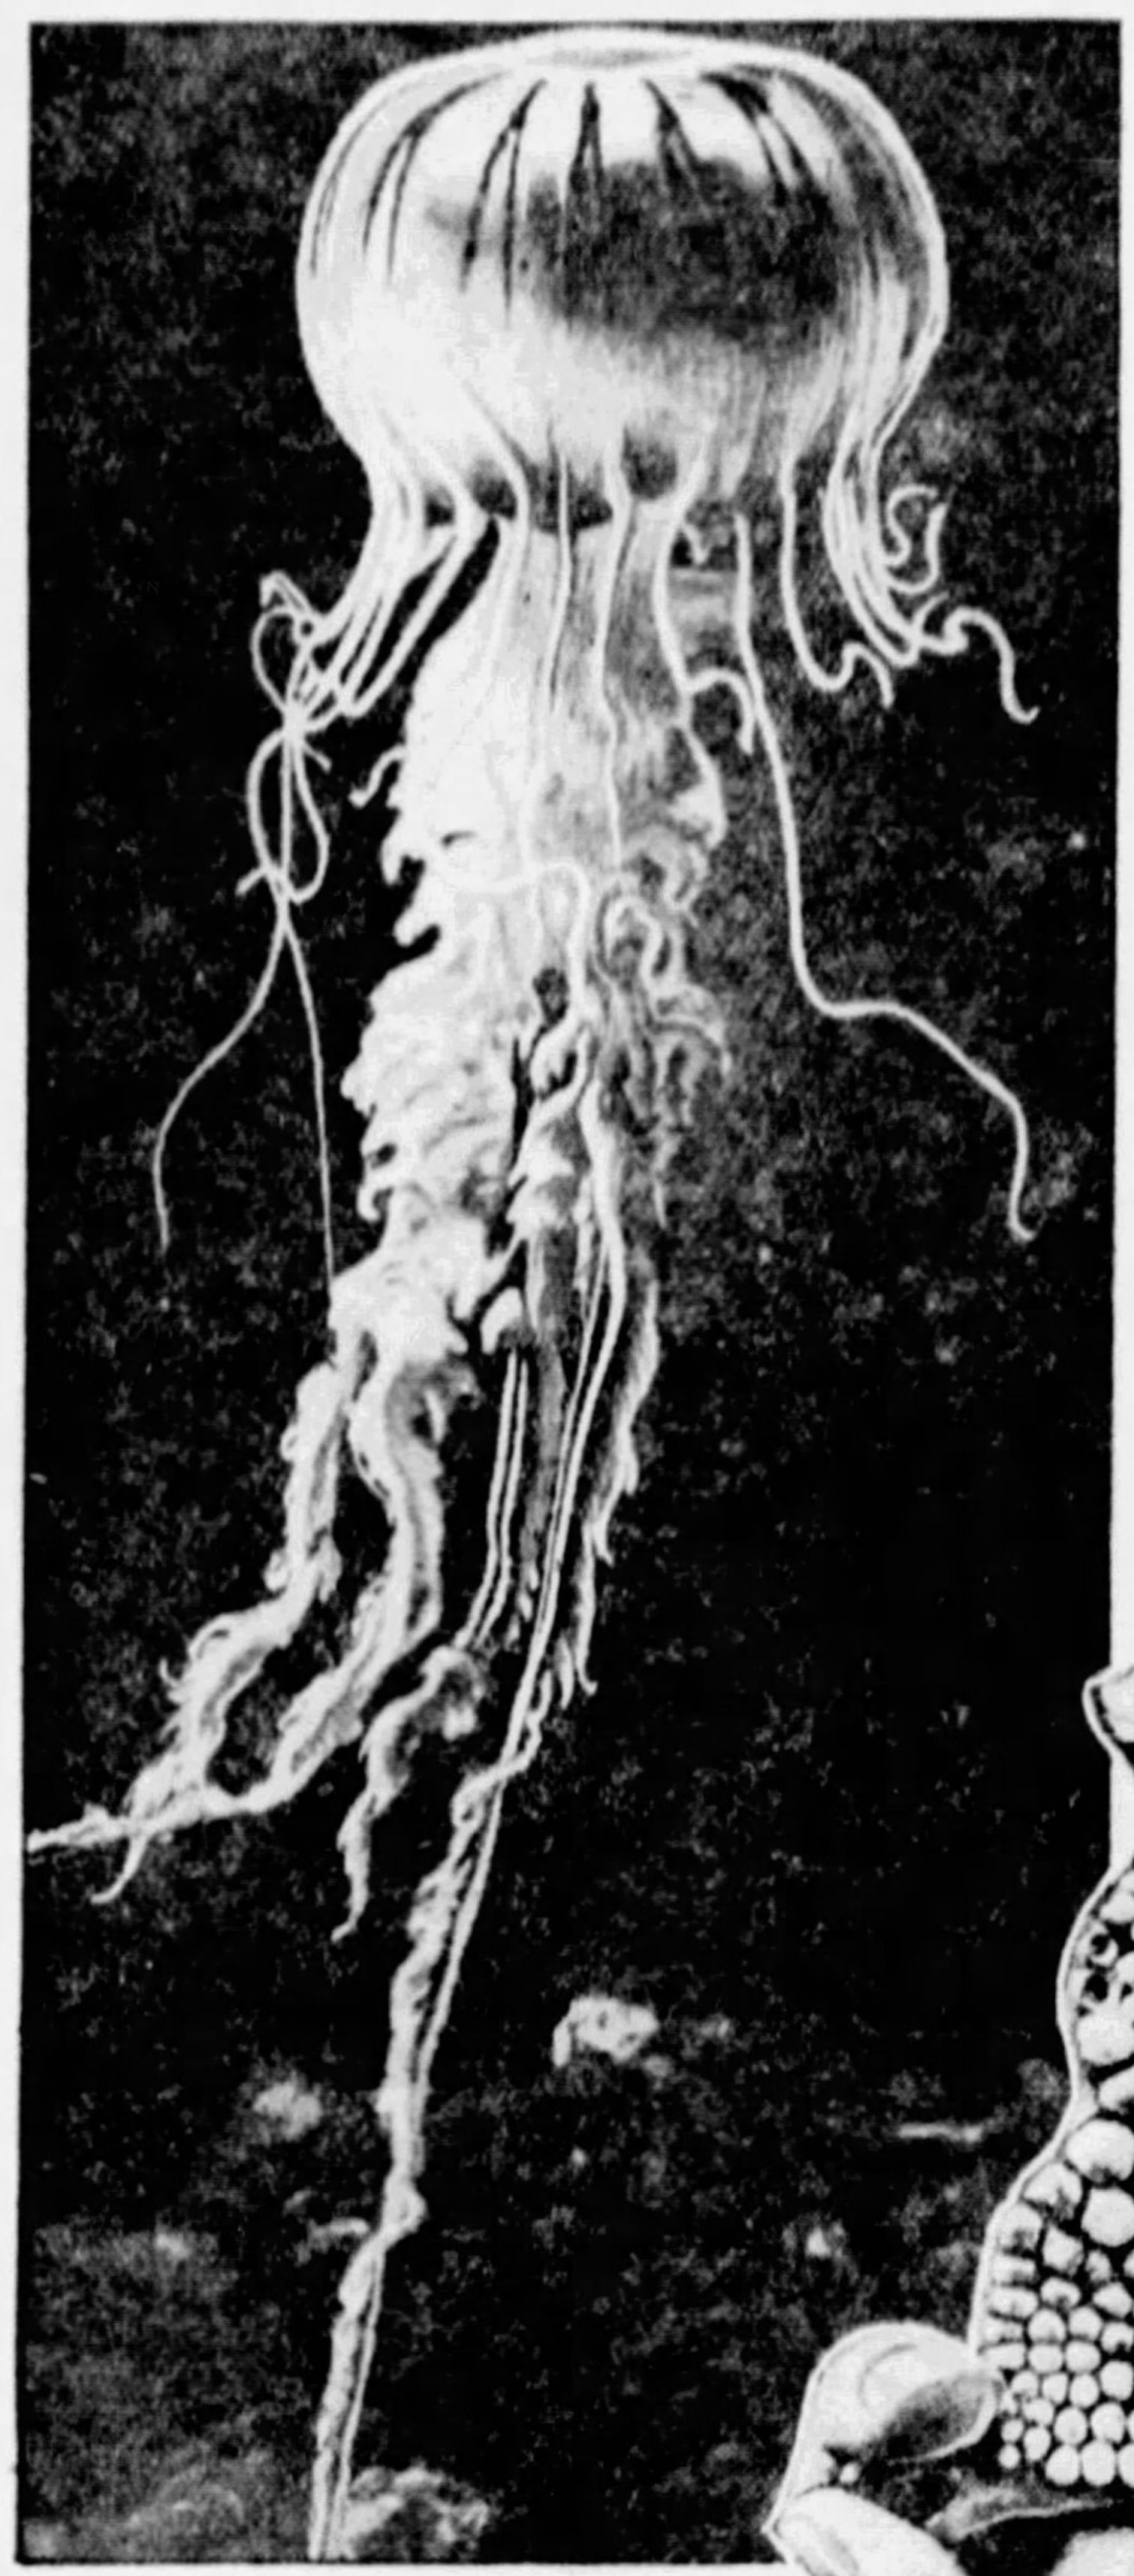
Why Our Grandchildren May Never Eat an Oyster

Although One Oyster in One Season May Have 500,000,000 Children, Yet So Many and So Efficient Are Its Enemies That One of Nature's Most Prolific Creatures Is Threatened With Extinction in Spite of Man's Best Efforts to Protect It



The Jellyfish, Comparatively a Newcomer to American Oyster Beds, Is Now Destroying Oysters in Rapidly Increasing Quantities.

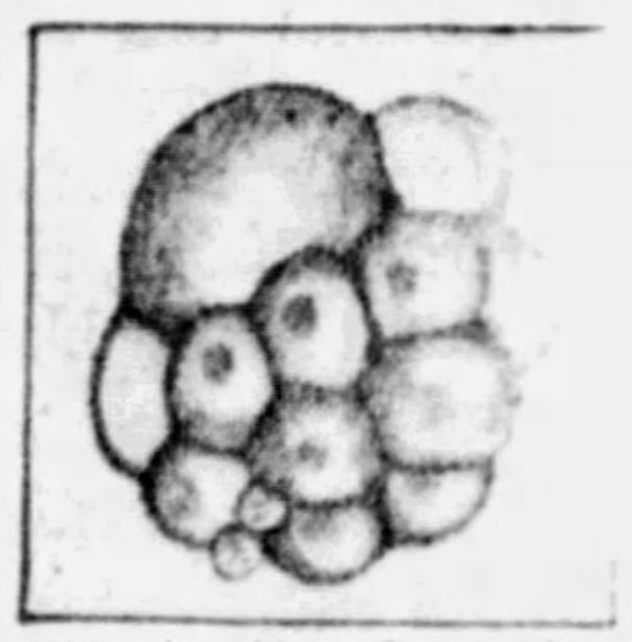
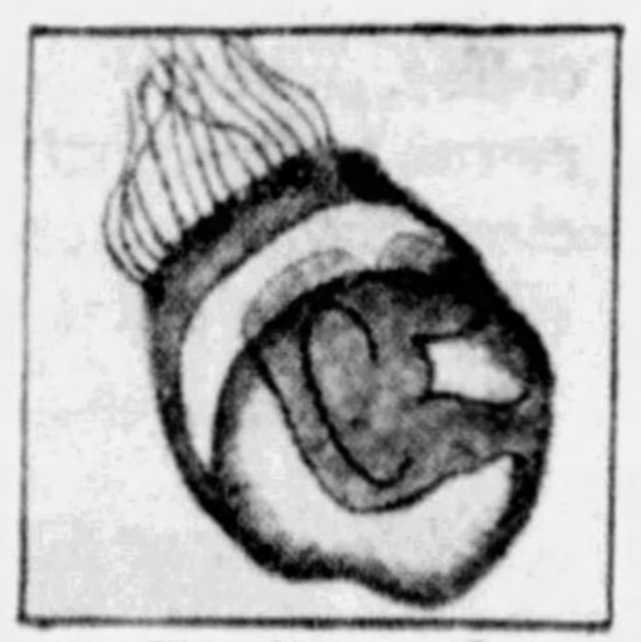
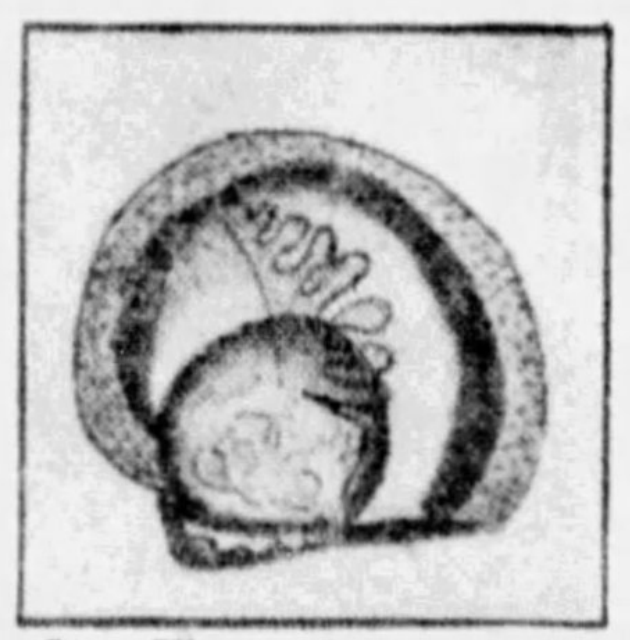
(2) The One-Celled Egg Grown Into Two Cells.



(3) It Has Now Developed Many Cells.



(4) The Young Oyster Ready to Grow Its Shell.



(5) First Appearance of the Shell.

EVERY human baby born in modern civilized countries has about one chance in two of living to maturity. But a baby oyster has less than one chance in a hundred million of accomplishing the same feat.

Billions of tiny fertilized oyster eggs are poured out into the water around the oyster beds like those of Chesapeake Bay every hour during the spawning season. Many millions are eaten at once by fish or other creatures, thus disposing of about half of the baby oyster's chances of staying alive. A few days later, when the tiny oyster begins to grow a shell, it may fall victim to jellyfish, crabs and still other predatory creatures. Even after the young oyster has grown to reasonable size it still has about ninety-nine chances in a hundred of being smothered or starved to death or eaten by some one of the fishes which Nature has equipped with machinery capable of crushing the oyster's shell. And when it survives all these dangers and grows up along comes man and dredges it out of its bed.

A single female oyster may discharge in a spawning season, it is estimated by Dr. Paul S. Galtsoff, of the United States Bureau of Fisheries, as many as 500,000,000 living eggs.

Oysters are among the most prolific creatures in the world. Nevertheless, the oyster population of American bays and seacoasts is shrinking steadily and Government authorities are afraid this useful food animal may be, before long, virtually exterminated.

But if our grandchildren may never eat an oyster, it will not be because of over-fishing of the oyster beds by man. Only some 20,000,000 bushels of oysters are dredged and sold each year, which perhaps amount to some 8,000,000,000 individuals. About forty female oysters could produce that many new oysters each year. The real reason oysters are decreasing and are threatened with extinction is because Nature has built up so many different creatures which, like man, have an appetite for oysters.

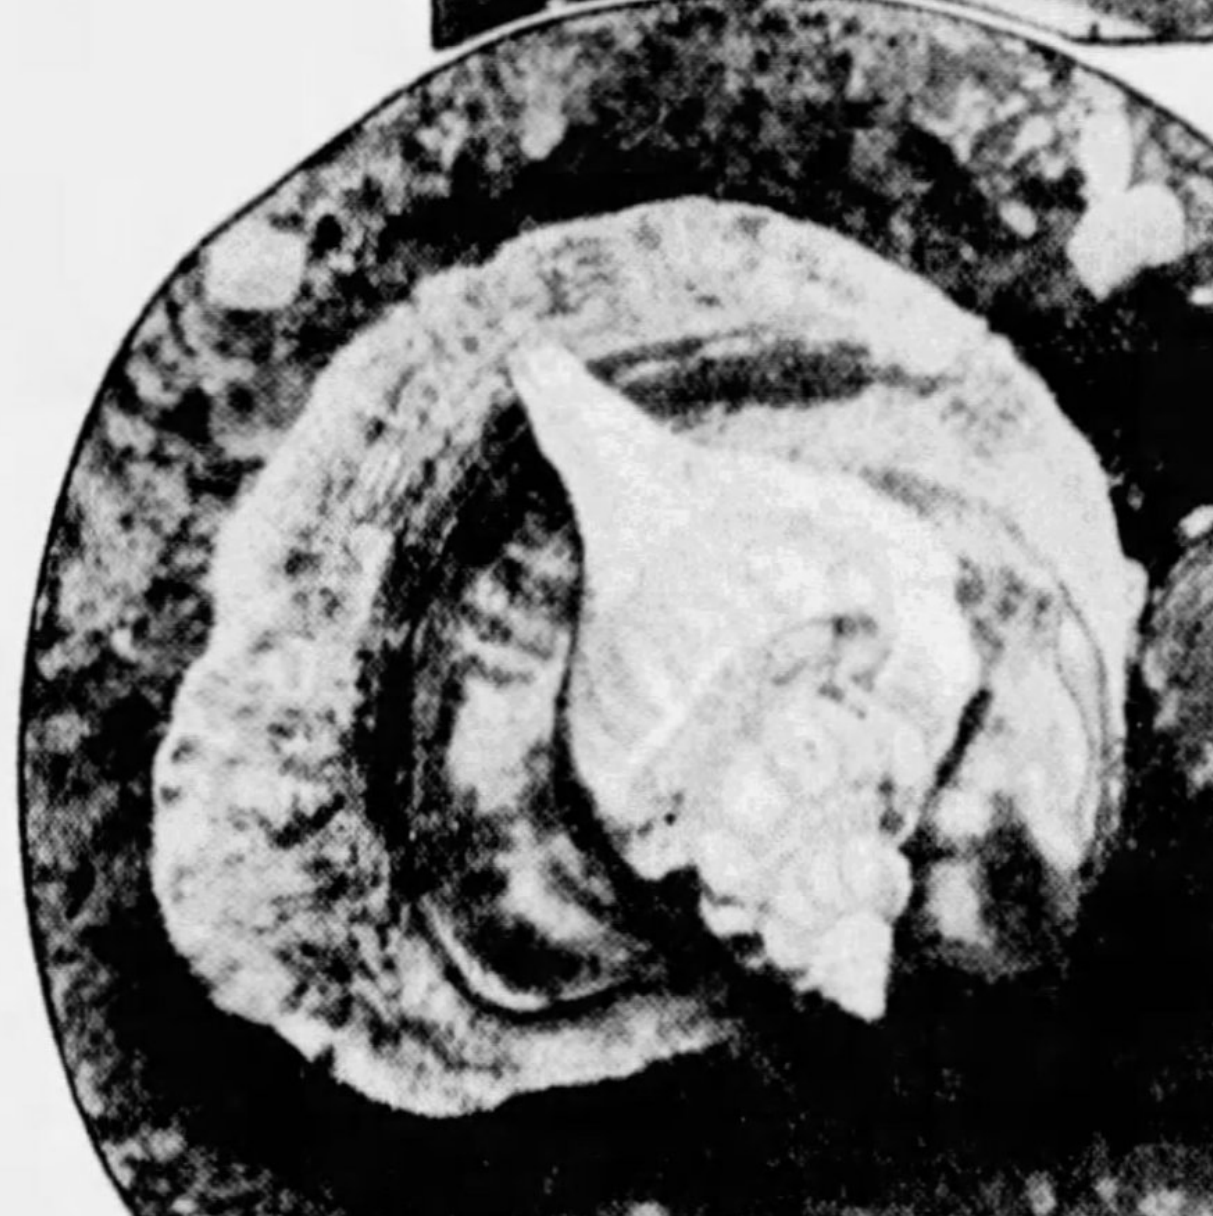
Indeed, an under-water oyster bed appears from the experts' accounts, not as a mere inert assemblage of almost lifeless creatures, but as a veritable city, with its criminals, its gang invasions and its multitudinous dangers to the oyster citizens. The problem before the scientists, who are disturbed by this menacing situation, is whether man can police the beds and protect the oysters from their many and varied and highly efficient murderous enemies.

Many millions of years ago in the evolution of the earth, as geologists read this from records in the rocks, ancestors of the modern oysters were shelless, free-living creatures accustomed to swim in the primeval seas and to find what food they could in these ancient waters. Gradually other kinds of creatures were developed by evolving life. Some of these other creatures acquired eager appetites for the free-swimming, unprotected oysters.

The Upper Oyster-Crushing Plate From the Throat of a Drumfish. The Lower Plate Is Similar and Between Them the Tough Shell Is Ground to Fragments.

By one of the compensations which Nature so often devises under such circumstances, the ancient ancestors of the oysters began to grow protective shells which their enemies could not penetrate. Thus began the fight which has continued ever since. On one side were the oysters, building themselves armor-plated houses like the defensive equipment of a modern battleship. On the other side were the oysters' enemies, devising better and better shell-crushing or shell-piercing machinery, like modern naval experts who build better and better armor-piercing guns. The enemies appear to be the better scientists, and at the moment, to have the oysters on the run.

Today the baby oyster rehearses in its life story a good deal of this history of its species. In the beginning, when first discharged from the mother oyster's shell, the baby is nothing but a naked droplet of living matter, not unlike what scientists imagine to have been the first living creatures in the ancient seas. Day by day this drop of living matter enlarges and becomes more complicated, presently developing a series of tiny hair-like projections, the so-called cilia, which wave in the water and enable the baby oyster to swim. In this stage the baby is not unlike what its ancestors are imagined to have been hundreds of millions of years ago and the baby must still run the gauntlet of modern equivalents of that ancestor's enemies.



A Periwinkle Drilling Into an Oyster. It Has Revolving Teeth Which Bore Right Through the Shell.

Many kinds of fish live on the myriads of floating creatures, mostly microscopic in size, which are to be found in virtually all well-peopled waters. Gulping such water in great mouthfuls, these fish filter out of it the tiny creatures which they use for food. One good sized fish probably eats thus at one gulp enough baby oysters to people the whole of an oyster bed.

On the sea bottom there are likely to be growing, also, veritable forests of the flower-like sea anemones. Animals provided with fringes of tentacles like flower petals seize the floating baby oysters by myriads and cram them into the anemones' maws.

Sea squirts, small shrimp-like creatures, and scores of other swimming animals or sea-bottom denizens capture millions of the baby oysters which escape the fish and the anemones. Millions of others fall victim to the devouring proclivities of clams and other shell fish. Even the older oysters themselves are often cannibalistic devourers of their own young.

Once the swimming stage of the baby oyster is over the tiny creature, already protected by the beginnings of a shell, settles down somewhere on a suitable spot on the sea bottom and remains there for the rest of its life. Food comes to it from the water, a continual stream of which is pumped in and out of the shell by a living pumping mechanism in the oyster's body. From this stream of water the oyster filters out all solid materials, including the millions of tiny plants and animals which ordinary sea water always contains—and, unfortunately, many of its own children.

Once the baby oyster has developed sufficiently to be able to swim it probably succeeds in escaping most of these cannibalistic efforts of its own parents. It immediately is threatened, however, by a still more dangerous enemy. Recently the Atlantic coasts of the United States have been infested by myriads of a kind of jelly-fish apparently very fond of these swimming baby oysters. They are distant relatives of the sea anemones and eat, as the anemones do, by means of waving tentacles which cram small food particles into the jelly-fish mouths.

These jelly-fish, however, are not confined to the sea bottom as the anemones are, but can swim freely through the water, sweeping up uncountable billions of the baby oysters as they go. A large part of the recent tendency for oyster beds to decrease in size and population is ascribed by experts to the hordes of these jelly-fish recently present on the Atlantic coast. Why they are multiplying in such quantities nobody knows.

Within two or three weeks after their birth the baby oysters grow small shells and settle down to their life-long homes on the sea bottom. That ends, in the main, the menace of the jelly-fish, but now there are other enemies to take its place. Species of sea-bottom worms begin attacking the young oysters. Several varieties of crabs also consider these small thin-shelled creatures as desirable delicacies. Even when the young oyster has grown sufficiently in size to have a thick, armor-like shell its troubles are by no means over.

Then comes one of the worst of all menaces to the oyster—the starfish. The underside of the starfish is provided with a number of thin, tube-like projections, each equipped at its tip with a small sucker by which the foot can be attached to the surface of a rock or the shell of an oyster.

Countless thousands of starfish sweep over an oyster bed, each attaching itself to an oyster's shell, and when the oyster must open for a breath of fresh water, the starfish maintains a steady pull, preventing the oyster from closing its shell. Slowly the oyster shell is forced open a little wider until the starfish projects its own stomach into the crack, for the digestive machinery of starfish can be thrust outside of the body to digest food, instead of the food being swallowed and digested inside.

Entire oyster beds have been wiped out by the invasion of an army of starfish, leaving nothing but empty shells behind.

Adult oysters, apparently so safe inside their shells on the sea bottom of an oyster bed, are threatened, too, by many enemies besides the starfish. There is another group of sea-bottom worms equipped with chemical machinery to drill holes through the oysters' shells.

There is a group of sponge animals similarly able to dissolve a hole through the oysters' armor. It is probable that this sponge has no evil designs on the oyster inside the shell but is merely endeavoring to excavate a foundation and a firm foothold for itself. If a sponge had any brains it would be as surprised, no doubt, as is the oyster to discover that the supposed foundation of its house had broken through into some other creature's home. But whatever the intentions of the sponge may be, the result is equally disastrous to the oyster.

In many parts of the world there exist, also, small shell-fish of the periwinkle group which possess another type of machinery by which to penetrate the oysters' shells. These are the so-called "drills," much dreaded by the oyster farmer. At one end of the body of the drilling periwinkle Nature has provided a set of sharp teeth, like the teeth on a saw. These can be rotated as a driller rotates the tools with which he sinks an oil well. Gradually the tiny boring machinery penetrates the oyster's shell and another oyster departs from the population.

Finally, among living enemies, the oyster city is threatened once in a while by attacks of veritable devouring machines, like great war tanks sweeping across a human village. Two prominent kinds of American fish, the drumfish and the stinging ray, possess machinery against which the oyster's shell armor is of little use.

In the jaws of the stinging ray are two sets of crushing machines like a pair of gigantic nutcrackers. A school of these fish, advancing slowly across an oyster bed, may wipe out the population utterly in a single night.

The drumfish, equally dangerous to the oyster cities, has in its throat a crushing mechanism not unlike a powerful coffee grinder. Either of these living machines can crush an oyster shell like paper, leaving the naked animal to be swallowed and digested by the fish.

But even if an oyster escapes all these living enemies Nature is not through with its tribulations. One of the greatest dangers of oyster life, experts discover, is that the motionless animal, unable to leave even for a second its attachment to the sea bottom, will be smothered by sand or mud stirred up by storms or brought down by river floods.

And that is not all.

A part of the oyster's food comes from the tiny sea plants which require phosphorus and nitrogen in the water. Sometimes the water about an oyster bed ceases to contain enough of these two chemical elements, the plant population stops growing and the oysters in turn starve, sicken and die.

Why ruthless Nature seems to persecute the harmless and valuable oyster in so many ways is a puzzle.

So many and so complicated are the menaces which Nature has built up around the oyster, that the best efforts of science have so far failed to cope with the situation, and the oyster supply of the world is growing smaller every year.

Rancid Oil Revealed in Stale Coffee

Science calls it Menace to Health . . . Blames this Rancid Oil for Indigestion, Headaches, Sleeplessness

No Rancid Oil in Chase & Sanborn's . . . this Coffee is guaranteed fresh when you get it!

HERE'S THE STALE COFFEE STORY IN BRIEF:

1 shows the type of warehouse where even high-priced coffees are often stored for long periods of time before they go to your grocer.

2 is an actual photograph of a grocery store where the photographer purchased coffee more than one year old. How long does most coffee linger on your grocer's shelves?

3 is a microphotograph showing how rancid oil from stale coffee refuses to combine properly with digestive juices.

ONE by one science is cutting down the dangers that menace human life . . . constantly making new discoveries that protect us.

Now medical research steps forward and announces this startling discovery about coffee . . . says that rancid oil found only in stale coffee is directly responsible for indigestion, headaches, sleeplessness . . . the very troubles usually blamed on coffee itself!

The story of this amazing discovery is an extremely interesting one.

All coffee . . . whether fresh or old . . . contains a certain percentage of oil . . . approximately a half cup to every pound of coffee. When coffee is fresh, this oil is as sweet as fresh butter. It contains the delicious flavor and aroma provided by nature. which make coffee such a delightful drink.

But when coffee gets stale . . . when it is stored too long after roasting (either ground or in the bean), this oil turns rancid . . . just as butter does. It is then that the oil is harmful. And science blames this rancid oil for indigestion, headaches, sleeplessness. Naturally, the flavor of the coffee is also affected. It becomes bitter and flat-tasting.

The problem, then, is simply this: Be sure the coffee you drink is fresh!

With Chase & Sanborn's Coffee there is not the slightest danger of rancid oil . . . This coffee is guaranteed fresh when you get it . . . It's rushed to your grocer straight from the roasting ovens. Every can is plainly marked with the date your grocer receives it.

That date is your protection! Regularly a Chase & Sanborn representative visits your grocer and makes a check-up. If he finds any can unsold whose date is more than ten days old, he immediately replaces it with a fresh can.

There is seldom any to replace because our deliveries are so frequent and your grocer's needs so carefully analyzed. But at any rate you can't possibly buy a can of Chase & Sanborn's Coffee that is more than ten days old! Chase & Sanborn's is guaranteed fresh when you get it!

Play safe . . . Use this coffee you know is fresh. No other coffee gives you this positive guarantee of freshness . . . this absolute protection against the dangers of stale, rancid coffee!

Insist on Chase & Sanborn's. See what a difference freshness makes in richness of flavor . . . in fragrant, tempting aroma. No other coffee will satisfy you, once you have tasted this one. You'll be delighted to find this delicious quality blend reasonably priced . . . no higher than the ordinary packaged coffees.

Measuring off a certain quantity of rancid oil to be used in a particular experiment which will determine degree of acidity.

FROM THE MEDICAL LABORATORY comes this startling news about coffee! Science says all coffee contains oil . . . approximately a half cup to every pound.

In fresh coffee this oil is very precious . . . It contains the delicious flavor and aroma that make coffee such a marvelous drink. But in stale coffee this oil is dangerous. When coffee is stored too long after roasting (either ground or in the bean) science says this oil turns rancid . . . spoils . . . becomes actually poisonous.

Actual feeding experiments on human beings, conducted under the most rigid laboratory supervision, show that this rancid oil causes indigestion, headaches, sleeplessness, the troubles usually blamed on coffee itself!

Make sure the coffee you drink is fresh. Use Chase & Sanborn's . . . then you'll know you're safe!

FRESH COFFEE is the most delicious and refreshing of drinks . . . a wholesome, mild stimulant provided by nature to help us enjoy life to the full . . . But science warns you to beware of stale coffee. It blames the rancid oil found only in stale coffee for indigestion, headaches, sleeplessness.

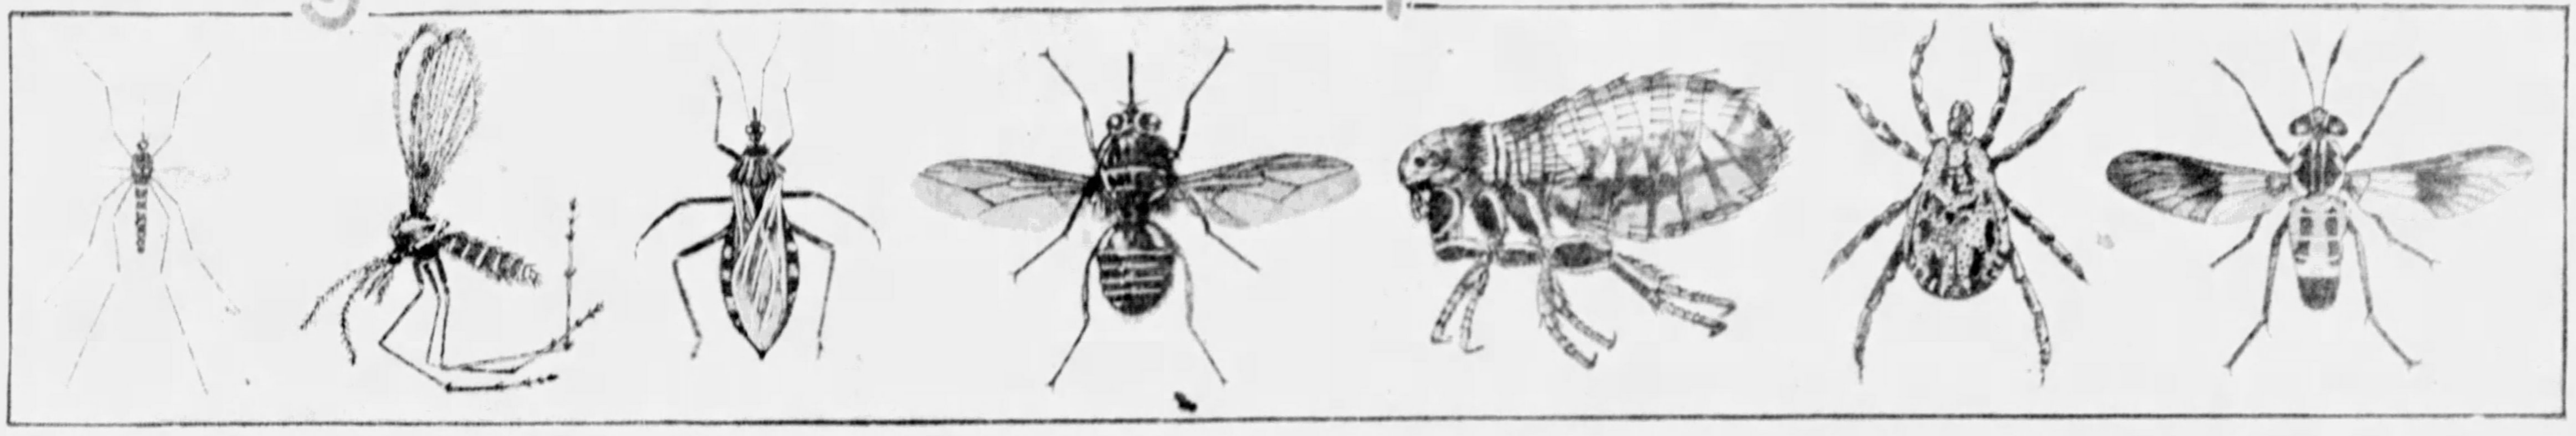
Strange Diseases of the Tropics Fatal to White Men



Some of the Energetic and Harmless Looking Tropical Insects Which Inoculate White Visitors With Dangerous Diseases.

Countless Bugs, Insects, Worms, in the Air, the Earth and the Water, Deadly Germs and Even Little Poisonous Plants Too Small to Be Seen, Which Menace Travelers

The Late Prof. Carl Akeley, Representative of the American Museum of Natural History, New York City, on a Gorilla Hunt in Africa, Where He Died and Is Now Buried.

Miss Edwina Booth, Movie Star, Who Went to Africa to Film "Trader Horn" and Contracted Various Tropical Diseases Which Nearly Cost Her Her Life.

Mme. Melba, Famous Grand Opera Star, Who Died Recently From a Skin Infection Contracted During a Visit to Egypt.

The Late Theodore Roosevelt, Who Contracted Various Illnesses in the South American Jungle, From Which He Never Fully Recovered.

THE recent death of Madam Melba, the famous grand opera prima donna, from a skin infection acquired during a visit to Egypt, attracts attention again to the dangers which threaten members of the white races who visit the tropics. The late President Roosevelt, in full vigor, penetrated the jungles of tropical South America, returned stricken with malaria and other infections, never fully recovered, and in his weakened condition died not long after. John Barrymore went for a honeymoon cruise on his yacht along the coast of Central America, caught jungle fever and came home a very sick man. Professor Carl Akeley, the American Museum of Natural History's expert on African gorillas, was stricken, lingered a few days and died, and was buried in the jungle.

Edwina Booth, the movie actress, in a well-outfitted expedition to the tropics to film the picture, "Trader Horn," caught half a dozen different infections, in spite of many precautions, and was a long time in hospital regaining her health. Dr. Noguchi, of the Rockefeller Institute, died in West Africa from yellow fever while studying a cure for the disease. Sir Andrew Balfour, distinguished director of the London School of Tropical Medicine, has just died in London from tropical fever contracted in Africa.

The list of bugs and insects that fly and crawl everywhere in the tropics eager to bite the white-skinned visitor and spread diseases, includes many hundreds in variety. Some of these insects are infected with dangerout germs, like the germ of yellow fever carried by the tropical mosquito, or the germ of sleeping sickness carried by the African tsetse fly. There are also poisonous reptiles in great numbers and variety, and a long list of tiny plant organisms like the molds which produce diseases sometimes fatal.

Although the city of Washington is on about the same parallel of latitude as Northern Africa, and Jacksonville, Florida, the same as Cairo, Egypt, and Southern Texas and Southern Florida on the same parallel as pest-ridden districts of Africa, yet none of these tropical pests is found to any important amount in the United States except malaria. For some reason, the island of Cuba, which lies below the Tropic of Cancer, is singularly free from the dangerous molds, bugs and insects of the same latitudes in other parts of the world, and there is not a poisonous snake in Cuba. In the Philippine Islands, however, many varieties of dangerous pests are widespread.

One tiny plant organism common in South America, the "mal de los pintos," produces in a single week brilliant patches of yellow, scarlet or purple on the skin of its victims. Another tropical mold disease penetrates the feet and causes the painful, club-like swelling called madura foot. Another produces a painful, ulcerated swelling of the toes called mango toe.

In the majority of tropical countries streams and ponds are alive with microscopic, swimming creatures able to burrow through the skin to produce, for example, the dangerous and painful disorder called elephantiasis in which the lower limbs may swell to three or four times their normal size. The trouble is due, in reality, to millions of tiny worms which grow and breed in the body from the germ that pierced the skin. Another animal parasite produces the dangerous and usually fatal disease called kala-azar, the victims of which slowly waste away as the infection destroys the living constituents of the blood.

Some of the tropical diseases are confined to those regions because the germ is not able to live anywhere else. The animal parasite which causes elephantiasis, for example, seems unable to find suitable conditions for its life outside the tropics although visitors not infrequently bring back samples of these germs to the temperate zones. Other diseases common in the tropics probably would be worldwide were it not for the higher standards of living and better sanitation common in the temperate zone. There was a time, for example, when diseases like cholera, smallpox and bubonic plague were scourges of the whole world. Nowadays these are confined largely to the tropics merely because it is in the tropics that sanitation is least attended to.

Visitors from the temperate zone frequently are surprised that human beings can survive at all amid the manifold germ enemies of the tropics. Survival, in fact, is about all that the native races of the tropics can accomplish unless aided by outside medical science. Malaria, yellow fever and the myriad other germs not only take enormous toll of the native populations, but weaken the survivors so that life is shortened, health is decreased and the energy necessary for the advance of civilization is destroyed. People may survive and live for years harboring millions of malarial germs or molds, worms, or other parasites. But these persons are inevitably weakened and made less efficient in the business of life.

Among persons raised outside the tropics the ravages of tropical germs are likely to be still more severe since these persons have not acquired any degree of the immunity or tolerance. Many sanitary experts now are concerned, for example, over the possibility that the increasing use of airplanes to and from the tropics may cause some of the more serious tropical diseases to spread to other lands. It is very important to the whole world, these experts urge, that the advance of medical science in tropical regions be hastened as much as possible, as the best way to head off such a germ invasion by the air.

One of the most dangerous of all tropical parasites is the remarkable vein worm especially prominent in northern Africa and which produces the wasting disease called bilharzia, named after Dr. Bilharz, who first discovered the nature of the disease in Egypt three quarters of a century ago.

This parasite passes a part of its life in the human body and another part in the bodies of fresh water snails. From the body of an infected snail there escape tiny swimming creatures like microscopic worms with forked-tails. These invisible animals penetrate the skin of persons who wade or bathe in infected waters and migrate through the body to live and mate in the human veins, first producing millions of creatures like themselves and then discharging billions of eggs which get into running or standing water, penetrate the bodies of snails and go through their life cycle all over again. Dr. F. C. Haslem, of the London School of Tropical Medicine, recently stated that the use of irrigation in Egypt is spreading this parasite through the entire population, the parasite entering the skins of farmers or others who come in contact with infected irrigation water.

South and southwest of Egypt large areas of Africa are virtually useless to man because of an even more famous scourge, the sleeping sickness. Victims of this infection first acquire a fever. Then the glands under the arms and other places slowly enlarge, the victim feels weak and lazy, presently he spends most of his time sleeping, after a little while he dies from weakness. This disease is caused by a microscopic parasite of the blood; not a worm, this time, but a one-celled creature belonging to the group of protozoa. Two varieties of this parasite exist in different parts of Africa and both are spread by blood-sucking flies, chiefly the tsetse insect. A traveler southward from Egypt first must run the gauntlet of the bilharzia parasites lurking in pools of irrigation ditches through which he wades. Then he must protect himself from the bites of the tsetse fly, likely to be infected with the germ of sleeping-sickness.

Closely related to this sleeping-sickness germ are the microscopic animal parasites which cause many tropical fevers like the "relapsing fever" of Africa and India; the "tick fever" of the former continent, produced by the bite of an insect; the "seven-day fever" believed to be spread by bites of field mice; a number of the types of "jungle fever" of South America, and many others.

Even yellow fever now is believed, following recent researches by the famous Japanese biologist Dr. Hidejo Noguchi, to be due to a germ of the animal group, carried by the infected mosquitoes. Another dangerous tropical disease called Weil's disease or infectious jaundice, a disease which has taken enormous toll of European residents in the tropics at times of past epidemics, is now believed to be caused by a blood parasite of this same group, but how this parasite is spread is still unknown. Fortunately, either the parasite itself or the unknown insect or other creature which carries the parasite to man must be incapable of existence outside the tropics, as this disease shows little tendency to spread.

Other common tropical diseases due to animal parasites which get somehow through the skin are yaws and gangosa, the latter almost confined to the Pacific Islands of Guam. Both diseases can be spread by mere contact without the intervention of any insect to carry them. The same was believed until recently for the widespread disease of the countries around the eastern end of the Mediterranean Sea, called kala-azar or "Dumdum fever." The germ of this disease is carried by a kind of sand fly common around sea beaches and desert water holes. So this apparently harmless insect is another of the enemies of which tropical visitors must beware.

Along the coasts of Africa there exists a group of parasites which cause diseases like the so-called "Calabar swelling." One of these parasites, the loa-loa worm, once it has penetrated the body, has the curious habit of migrating into the eye, where it frequently crawls back and forth inside the eyeball, causing extreme discomfort. This is one of the most dangerous tropical parasites for temperate zone visitors, since the development of the worm inside the body may take more than four years. A person infected during a tropical visit may not know of his misfortune until several years after.

Related to the loa-loa worm is the so-called guinea worm, one of the largest of the human parasites. This worm may reach a length of twenty or thirty inches, crawling through the flesh just underneath the skin.

Another group of tropical parasites include the one called amebas which live in the human digestive system and produce a dangerous variety of dysentery. These amebas also cause the disease called tropical liver abscess. Tropical countries harbor more than a score of varieties of the so-called flatworms or flukes, some of which penetrate the lungs, others the intestines, still others the liver and other organs.

There exists in tropical countries, also, varieties of leeches, the young of which are only an eighth of an inch long or less and often are swallowed accidentally in water. These leeches then may live and grow in the passages of the nose or elsewhere in the body, causing excruciating pain or death. The Biblical prescription to drink water out of one's hands instead of directly from the stream or pool is believed to have been a sensible precaution against accidentally drinking some of these leeches.

And if the tropical visitor escapes all these myriads of animal parasites there are still the scores of hundreds of tropical skin molds, like the South American ones which produce the brilliant-colored "mal de los pintos," those of Madura foot, mango toe and many others. One of these skin molds produces the dangerous and annoying dhobie itch, common in India and which may be acquired by temperate zone visitors, remain dormant for years and then break out during some spell of hot weather to cause excruciating itching.

There are still many tropical diseases the causes of which are unknown, like the South American disease called goundou, characterized by bony growths in and around the nose and which is shown to have existed in ancient times in Peru as it does today. The only safe prescription for a visitor to the tropics is eternal vigilance against insects, avoidance of close contact with natives, unboiled drinking water or raw food and every other source from which some of the myriads of tropical parasites might penetrate. It is no wonder that explorers and others who must face these tropical dangers unprotected by civilized precautions so often return ill and broken in health.

"RUTHERFURD'S wife says he continuously and habitually tortured her, twisted her wrists and otherwise brutalized her by means of his great strength, threw water in her face, chased her into the bathroom, dazed her with a blow on the head, dragged her from an automobile, twisted her arm, caused her to fall and sprain her ankle while in a scuffle, permanently injured her in mind and body and made life with him unbearable. . . ."

This recital, made on the sands of Palm Beach, was interrupted by a masculine voice, which said:

"Is there anything remarkable in that? I guess you ladies do not read the papers."

The two ladies had forgotten a man lying nearby with a handkerchief over his face, and now, peering around the edges of their beach parasol, they saw a heavily built man, who looked very much like John M. L. Rutherfurd, wealthy society clubman and yachtsman of New York, striding away in his striped bathing suit.

Mrs. Rutherfurd, who relates all the cruelties cited in her suit which recently gave her a divorce at West Palm Beach, was Flo Crozer, daughter of the socially elect "Ned" Crozers, of Philadelphia. Curiously enough, though "permanently injured in mind and body" by his playfulness, Mrs. Rutherfurd asked no damages in the way of alimony from her wealthy husband, but only that he support their six-year-old son, Edward Crozer Rutherfurd, who is the only visible result of six years of embattled married life.

Mrs. Rutherfurd proved her charges in court to the satisfaction of the judge, and Mr. Rutherfurd, following the usual custom, did not bother to deny the accusations. After all, his were rather mild and gentlemanly methods compared to the vigorous ways other society husbands have used in showing disapproval of their wives.

To really belong in the hall of fame as a wife-torturer, Mr. Rutherfurd would have to equal the records of some of the following "wife-swatters," such as was claimed for Roger Lewis Barstow, wealthy polo player and author. His wife, Mrs. Theokitista Barstow, who was the widow of a surgeon in the Russian Czar's Imperial Guard, obtained a divorce the other day in Reno; so presumably the judge believed her story. The high spot in this Russian beauty's complaint was as follows:

"We were at a party one evening at the Millbrook, N. Y., home of Oakleigh Thorne," Mrs. Barstow stated, "when my husband became jealous because I danced with one of his friends. He dragged me from the floor and hurried me home in his car. Before we entered the house he seized me and tore my gown from my body. I was entirely nude. Then he beat me and left me lying on the steps, bleeding and exhausted by his brutality."

He is not credited with punching his wife harder or oftener than the average, but first stripping her and after the beating leaving her naked on his own doorstep is rather unusual in the annals of high society wife-beatings. It took three years of married life for Mr. Barstow to work up that much alleged annoyance at his better half.

Mrs. Helen L. Martin, of Sound Beach, Connecticut, testified that her husband, Oliver G. Martin, kissed her at the wedding, but cursed her during the honeymoon. Still, modern society brides are not as sensitive as in olden days, and she didn't mind his ways until a year later when he showed his displeasure by hitting Helen over the head with a smoking stand. Even that was overlooked, but in a hotel at Montreal she could not forgive the beating she says he gave her, because he first threw all her clothes out the window. That hurt her feelings, so she left him as soon as she could get something to wear.

Like compliments and presents, it is not always the punches and kicks that wives cannot forgive, but where and the spirit in which they are given. For instance, Mrs. Irene Hayes Russell had a flower shop on Park Avenue, New York, where she sold flowers to millionaires and finally married one of them, Warner F. Russell, a stock broker.

Of course, she expected him to say it with flowers, but after the marriage sometimes he said it with fists, so she told the judge. However, an occasional sock, especially if there was some reason for it, was not held unpardonable, as long as it was done in New York, her own home town. But when he punched her in the strange city of Chicago, while they were staying at the Blackstone Hotel, that was another matter. She solemnly warned him twice, like a referee cautioning a fighter to keep his punches up. The third time he swung on her she went right out and got a divorce.

In these society fist fights between husband and wife, sometimes prize-ring rules are observed, and sometimes everything goes. Most any kind of a weapon from a candlestick to a planked steak is used, wives get knocked down and dragged out and kicked before and after they are down. This would seem to be on the general principle that "all is fair in love and war," of which these marriages appear to be about an even mixture. Mr. George H. Macy, Yale athlete, social registerite of New York and scion of the wealthy tea-importing family, seems to have been as particular where his bare fists landed on his wife's anatomy as when he put on the gloves with his college mates, if his nineteen-year-old bride is to be believed. In her suit for separation Mrs. Nan Pierson Brooks Macy, a former Birmingham, Alabama, society beauty, said:

"Almost from the beginning of our marriage my husband flew into furious rages and beat me. Once when I was wearing a belted frock my husband punched me violently six times in the stomach. Then he smiled in a serious way and said to me:

"'I'm sorry; that wasn't cricket, hitting you below the belt, dearest. I never hit below the belt.'

"Then, just to prove he was not a foul fighter, he finished me off with a punch on the jaw."

Mrs. Macy seems to have taken this corporal punishment philosophically, until one of the beatings was followed by his removal of all the furniture and other possessions from their apartment, leaving her only a newspaper to sleep on. This caused Mrs. Macy to go right out and see a lawyer.

Mae Ayer, of the Hollywood colony, could tolerate a moderate amount of rough handling from her husband, Captain Wallace Ayer, until one day she says he hit her over the head with a rare planked steak. Women have been murdered, mangled and tortured by men in various ways, but as far as Mae could learn no man ever raised a planked steak to a lady before, and so she sued him for separation on the grounds of extreme cruelty. If it had been a custard pie, that might have been different.

Helen Maginnis Thorne Kohlsaat, of Chicago, might have put up with a reasonable amount of correction in the form of swings and uppercuts from Dietrich J. Kohlsaat, her bond-broker husband, as long as these were delivered in the privacy of her boudoir. But when, in the midst of a bridge party, instead of leading hearts she says he led with a right fist to her left eye, she resented it, told the judge and got a divorce. There is a time and place for everything. No matter what she does, no man should beat his wife at a bridge party.

Mrs. Dorothea McDonnell sued her husband, Francis R. McDonnell, New York stock broker, charging that he struck her with his fists on many occasions and sometimes choked and threatened to kill her. Except for marking all these incidents down in her memory, Dorothea did nothing about it until one time while scolding him about another woman, she says he said:

"Why don't you commit suicide, so I'll be free?"

Mrs. McDonnell considered that an improper suggestion and started giving him his freedom from her presence through the courts.

The most vehement expression of husbandly disapproval recently was that made by Richard Howland Jones, a social registerite and former Navy football star. After an all-night argument with his wife, Mrs. Louise Conkey Jones, in their apartment on the corner of Park Avenue and Eighty-seventh Street, New York, he hit her over the head with a candlestick and then jumped out of the window to his death eight floors below.

Mrs. May Robbins allowed her husband, Clifford R. Robbins, of Meriden, Conn., to park her for two years in a lonesome bed up in the attic, while he slept in the same bed with his mother downstairs. One night, determined to assert her rights, she climbed in beside her husband, only to be pushed out and land with a bump on the floor. The argument which followed brought in her father-in-law, Clifford A. Robbins, publisher of books on will-power, from his bedroom nearby. According to the wife's testimony, the elder Robbins threw her face down on the floor, tore off her nightgown and gave her a spanking with a leather strap. May thought that if a wife needs spanking it is not the father-in-law's job, so she went home to mother and a divorce.

Mrs. William H. Mendell, wife of the chain restaurant man, whose grandfather was made a millionaire because he got a restaurant concession at Grand Central Station, New York, in return for a leg lost in a railroad accident, says that her husband gave her a whole "flock of black eyes" and dislocated her jaw with a punch. He says that she employed a detective to hit him over the head with a blackjack and that she acquired the dislocated jaw and the "shiners" by drinking too much and falling down on her face. Anyway, she asked $12,000 a year alimony.

Perhaps the saddest of all the beaten wives is Harriet Sunday, wife of George Sunday, son of Billy Sunday, the evangelist. In spite of the benefit of his wealthy father's preaching and exhortations from childhood, George could not seem to stay on the sawdust trail. His wife testified that he drank to excess, ran around with other women, and when she complained beat her. As everybody seemed to think such behavior by the son of an evangelist a great joke, she got a divorce in the Los Angeles courts and $250 a month to support their two children.

A steam yacht seems a more appropriate place to make love to a woman than to beat her up. This is perhaps why Mrs. Linda Valla Woodworth, wife of the New York millionaire manufacturer, Chauncey Clark Woodworth, told the courts at West Palm Beach that she was tired of being kicked and punched around the decks of the Flyingby, anchored in Lake Worth, behind Palm Beach, and got $21,000 a year alimony.

Scientists point out that the faculty of learning from experience is one of the things that lifts mankind above the brute creation. It would seem that pretty Sylvia Whiton-Stuart of New York's fashionable East Side tried to apply experience acquired in her first matrimonial disaster to her second venture.

At the early age of seventeen, she eloped to Gretna Green, Maryland, and married Eric Stow Hatch, but before long presented herself before a divorce court judge in Connecticut, asserting that Eric drank excessively, had beaten her on several occasions, and once while under the influence of liquor, he humiliated her by driving guests from their home.

But not discouraged by her first try, Sylvia married young Lawrence Turnure of New York fashionable high life, and apparently immediately after the ceremony began to look for symptoms of trouble. It is reported that something happened at once which persuaded the bride of only an hour or so to go to her room and lock the door while her new husband went to his. Anyhow, no beatings or chasing of company out of the house happened this time, and although the second marriage took place only a year or so ago, Sylvia was out in Reno seven months later, and this time it was "mental cruelty."

There are many theories to account for the prevalence of wife-beating in high society. Wives say their husbands are awful, husbands say wives are getting so you can't do anything with them but hit 'em, and some blame it on the bad quality liquor they drink.

No Unmistakable Human Fossil Has Yet Been Discovered in the Strata of the Tertiary Era. The Earliest Bones of Man Do Not Date Back of the Pleistocene Period, and Yet Pleistocene Man Must Have Had Ancestors Who Would Date Into the Previous, or Tertiary, Era. This Early Ancestor Must Therefore Have Been the Contemporary of Animals as Extraordinary as the Sivatherium or the Dinotherium Shown Here. The Distinguished French Scientist.

PARIS, March 5.

AFTER a sleep of a million years or more, two human skulls were dug up in the ruins of what had once been their cave, some thirty miles from Pekin, China. One seems to have been a man and the other a woman, full grown but rather young.

From these skulls and the evidence in the surrounding soil science has begun piecing together the story of a great tragedy—the defeat, failure and extermination of an entire human race that set out hopefully but prematurely to fulfill man's destiny of conquering the world. The discovery stirred scientific circles because the skulls were sufficiently complete to give a good idea of what these most primitive of known human beings looked like, and there is much evidence to show how these first cave men lived.

But though they were human beings and the earliest whose remains have ever been identified, it is a mistake to call them "our earliest ancestors." They are not ancestors of any of the human races surviving today.

If their skulls could speak they might angrily tell us why. Their race died out, leaving no descendants, because, very likely, it was exterminated by Homo Sapiens, our own ancestor, who needed their caves and the food they ate. So Homo Sapiens made a business of killing Sinanthropus Pekinensis, the rude, apelike men and women who lived in caves, but hadn't brains enough to make a fire, who doubtless swung a mighty club and threw stones accurately, but were too stupid to work flints into heads for spears and arrows, or even to wear clothes, though the climate was cold and damp. There was a species of dog in existence there at that time, but no sign that the Pekin man had thought of any better use for the valuable animal than to eat him raw.

The Pekin man and woman belonged to a race that was one of Nature's many experiments that failed and were withdrawn from circulation, one of countless animal expeditions sent out to populate the earth that in the end perished, leaving nothing but their fossil bones to show that they ever lived. To say that the Pekin man and modern man had common ancestry does not mean much, because the same can be said of man and any of the animals if one goes far enough back.

One race or the other probably had to be exterminated because they could hardly have lived side by side. If the Pekin man were alive today in large numbers, he would be a calamity, and add just that much to the crime and unemployment problems. The size and shape of his skull, with its pinched forebrain, where the thinking is done, shows that the great, hulking chump, too stupid to make clothes, fire or weapons, would be classed today as a low-grade moron, so dull-witted as to be unemployable. Therefore, he would have to be fed and housed at public expense. Worse than that, he would be almost unteachable, and, therefore, it would be next to impossible to make him learn not to steal and kill to satisfy his animal-like appetites. Unless kept in an institution he would lead a wandering criminal life, making the countryside dangerous for anyone who did not go about heavily armed.

To picture what the Pekin man looked like, the best way is to repeat the carefully worked out description of the Neanderthal man, who came later and was a somewhat refined copy of this primitive brute man—but in no way related to the Pekin man, many scientists believe.

The Neanderthal man is of a very different appearance from man as we understand the word. He is separated from us by startling peculiarities. His massive, powerful body was very short, chiefly on account of the shortness of his legs. His head was large, he had a long face, very retreating at the forehead, and his upper jaw stretched out like the muzzle of an animal, while the lower jaw, although very powerful, had almost no chin. The orbital (eye) cavities were large and round and were surmounted by enormous bony arches forming a continuous ridge and strikingly resembling the eye cavities of the gorilla. The skull was flat, retreating, jutting out at the back and very much pushed down at the top. This skull contained a poorly developed brain with frontal lobes especially small compared to those of modern man, and convolutions resembling those of the monkey.

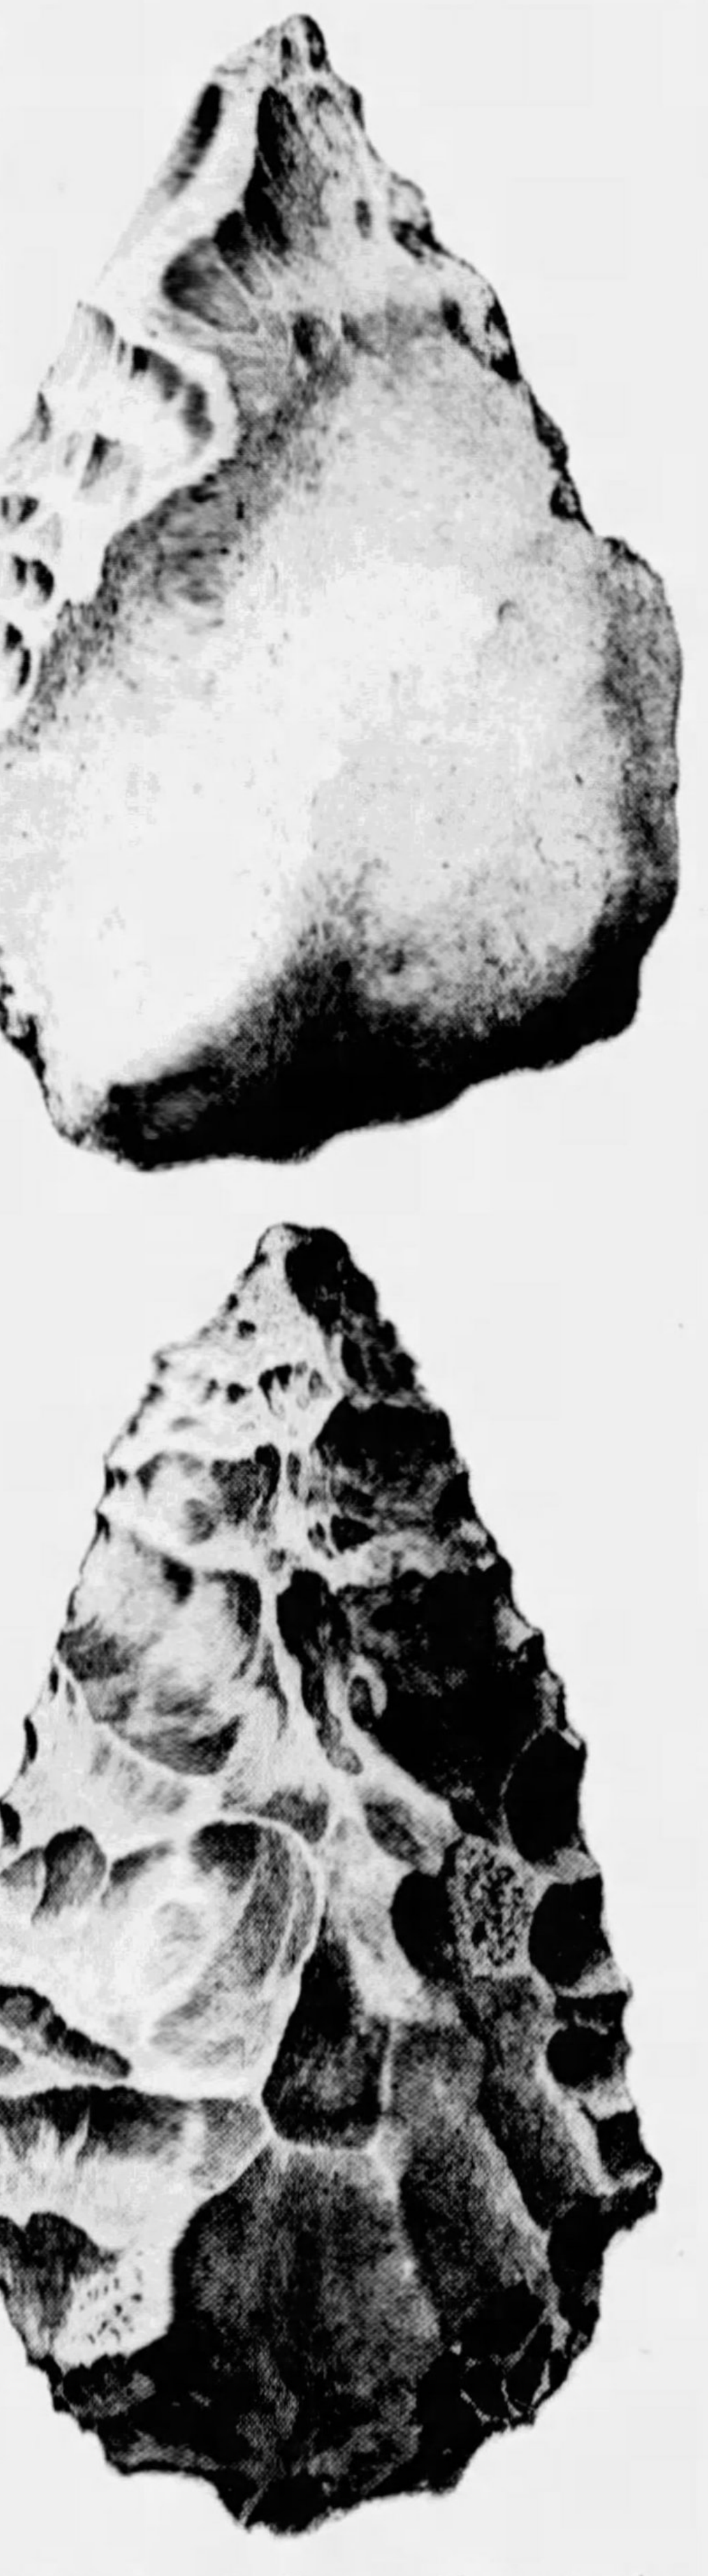
The rest of the skeleton shows the same monkey-like characteristics and indicates that the standing attitude of this creature must have been like that of the chimpanzee, that is to say, much less upright than that of modern man.

Since the first discovery of the remains of Neanderthal man, about twenty specimens of the Neanderthal type have been found in various places in Europe and Africa. This man-like creature existed at the very beginning of the Pleistocene Period and flourished particularly towards the middle of this period, when a cold and humid climate prevailed. He was a contemporary of the hairy mammoth, primitive elephant, woolly rhinoceros and other creatures as extinct as the Neanderthal man himself. He lived 500,000 to perhaps a million or more years ago.

But at the same time there lived beside the Neanderthal man another race of men similar in all points to the present race, and with a highly developed intelligence. This contemporaneous existence seems to prove that the two races did not have any common bond of relationship, or, at least, that one was not descended from the other. The Neanderthal man suddenly became extinct without reaching any high degree of perfection, and there has never since been found any sure example of an intermediate race between him and the present man.

When, then, did we come into existence? Science does not know this, and that is one of the great mysteries which still surround our evolution. But the Pekin skulls point to a much greater antiquity for our own race than had been supposed. It is the general belief now that our human ancestors were in existence and could have been recognized as big-brained, intelligent human beings as early as these Pekin men were on earth, and probably our ancestors exterminated the other human races by their superior smartness.

The Pleistocene Period began about a million years ago. It was during the Pleistocene that the Neanderthal man put in his appearance, covered the long ice ages, the last of which is estimated to have ended only some 30,000 to 40,000 years ago. The men of the old stone age have left their fire ashes, stone implements and their bones to show that they were in existence as far back as nearly the beginning of the first of the ice ages, the beginning of the Pleistocene. But the Pekin man's skull seems to date back of the glaciers, and shows that it was well evolved in the preceding era, the Tertiary. This was the long age during which mammals and modern plant life originated. The Tertiary Era began about 70,000,000 years ago, lasted about 69,000,000 years and ended 1,000,000 years ago, when the Pleistocene Period began. Toward the end of the early half of the Tertiary, the ape life was only beginning to take on anthropoid (manlike) characters.



Flints Split in the Manner Shown in the Upper Drawing Are Known as Eoliths—Stones Perhaps Formed by Nature but Handy for Use as Tools and Weapons. Stones Such as the Lower Figure Were Certainly Carved Intentionally by a Type of Man More Intelligent Than the One Who Used Stones Fashioned by Nature. From the Beginning of the Pleistocene Period Stones Fashioned by Man Are Found Associated With Human Remains. Eoliths Have Been Found in Tertiary Deposits, but No Human Remains Were Associated With Them.

Certainly there was nothing sufficiently human to be called man, at that time. In the latter half of the Tertiary came the culmination of the mammals and the transformation of manlike apes into apelike men. But until the unearthing of the Pekin man this was thought to have happened at the very tail end of the Tertiary. Now the discovery of the skulls and their surroundings seems to throw back the origin of the first man another million of years or more. And there is no reason, so far, to think that our own ancestors are not as ancient as those crude brute-men they managed to supplant.

The close relation of the Pekin man to the Neanderthal man already described is striking. It shows the same prolongation of the jaw, the same flattening of the skull, the same bigness of the eye cavities, the same development of the ridge above the eyes. But on account of other characteristics, the Sinanthropus is, if one may be permitted to say so, more of a monkey than the Neanderthal man and his other European brothers.

The development of the tympanic bone above the opening of the ear is an arrangement hitherto found only among the monkeys. The same may be said of several details in the shape of the skull and also of the jaw of another creature of the same race which was found in China, showing teeth very much like those of the monkeys.

In short, if we leave out of account the Pithecanthropus of Java, which is still too uncertain to pass upon, the Sinanthropus of Pekin must be by far the most ancient man-like creature known up to the present day. The immense scientific value of such a discovery cannot be exaggerated.

If this creature is the ancestor of a race which has become extinct in Europe, how did he happen to leave his bones in China? Dr. Davidson Black puts forward the hypothesis that this human type originated in Central Asia and from there spread at the same time towards the east and the west. But if we consider the migrations of various mammalian races, it seems more probable that the ancestors of the Chinese man came from the south of India and that they traveled along the coast, following the same route as the rusa deer, the muntjac and other herbivorous animals whose pathway has been clearly followed.

Whatever may be the truth on these points, we are in a position to reproduce this manlike creature as he looked when alive. We have just sketched his physical appearance when speaking of the Neanderthal man. The same type is greatly exaggerated in the man of Pekin. This creature walked along on his crooked legs with bent back, letting his hands hang down at the end of his long arms, which he held considerably away from his body, or else he climbed up trees whose fruits and nuts formed his principal nourishment. His body was probably covered with hair, although we cannot speak positively on this point.

It can, however, be stated that it is extremely probable, because he was able to endure great cold, though he did not know how to cover himself with the skins of beasts nor to warm himself at a fire, although the climate was harsh a considerable part of the year. However, he had sense enough to take refuge from the weather in caves, and it was to a cave that he retired to die, sometimes suddenly, unexpectedly and in the best of health.

Those caves were anything but a safe refuge because, having no fire to scare them away, the Pekin man must have slept with the uneasy knowledge that he might have visitors before morning. Among these were two species of big bears, a hyena, a large tiger and the Machairodus, a nightmare creature in cat form, the size of a lion, but with canine teeth as long and pointed as a dagger, giving it the name of sabre-toothed tiger. All these deadly beasts liked the caves as well as man did and inhabited them at the same time.

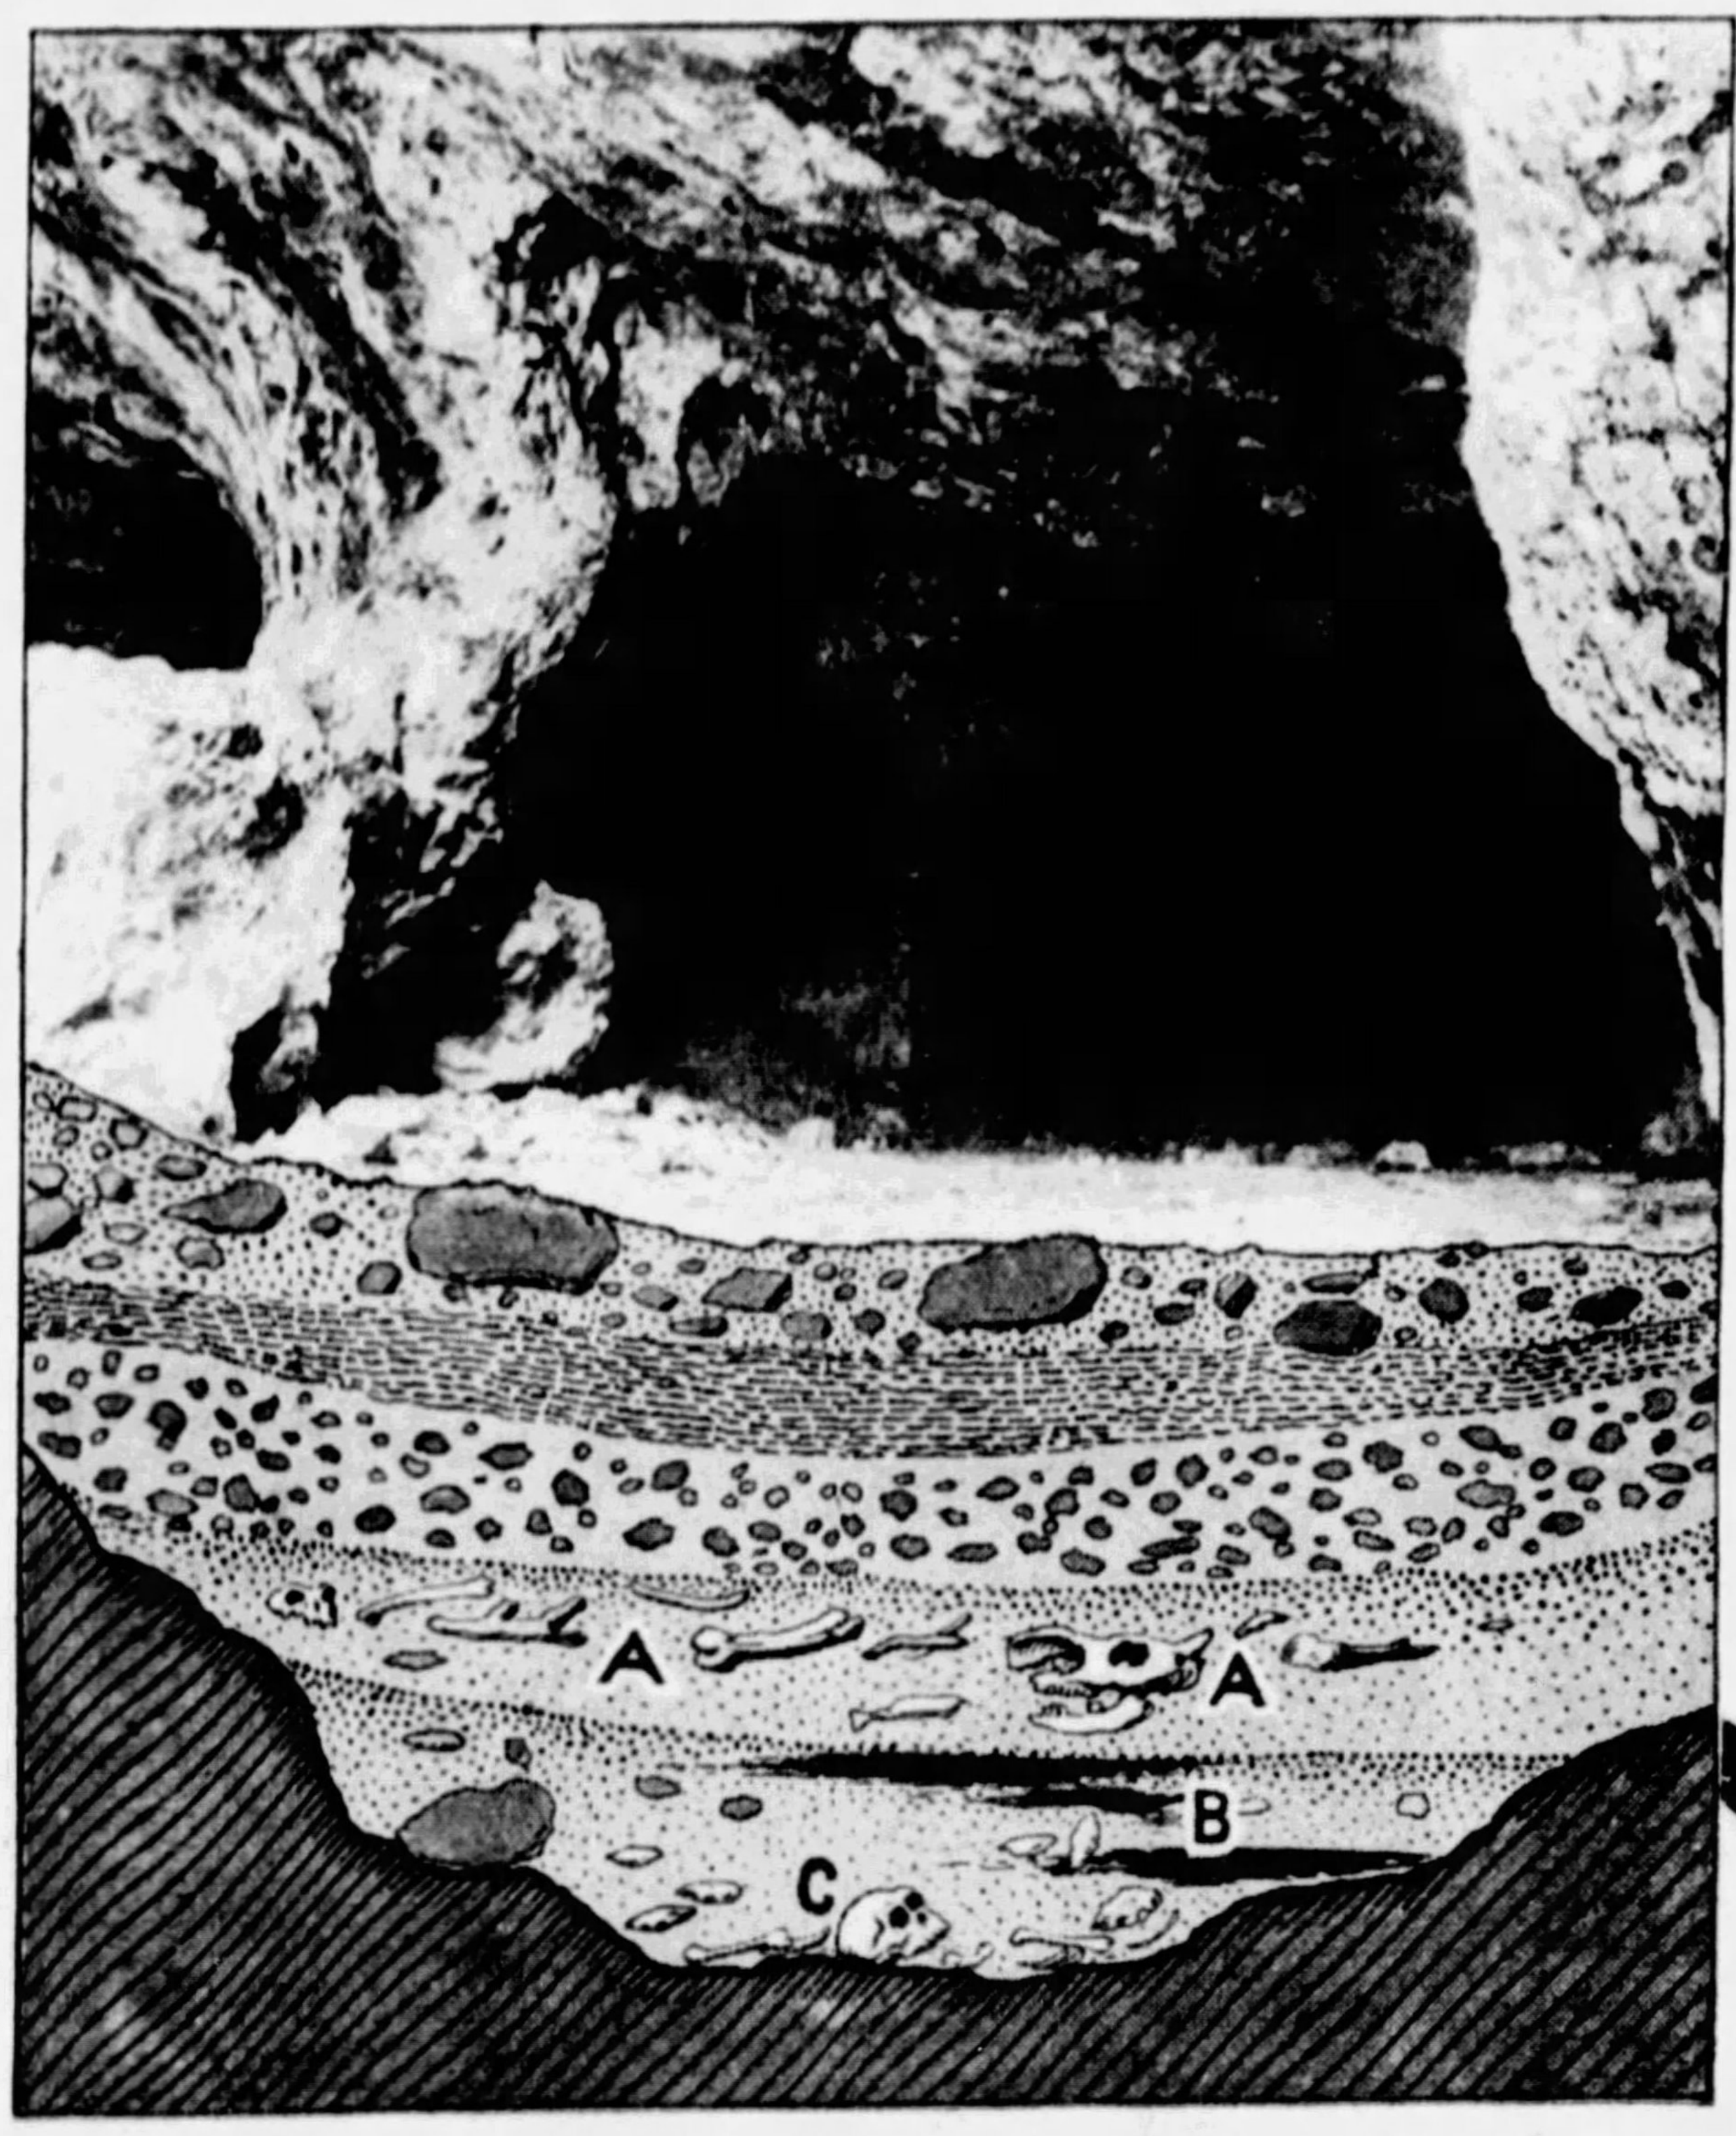
A Reconstruction of Neanderthal Man Carefully Made Under Scientific Direction for the Tussaud Museum, London. This Man Probably Lived During at Least Part of the Period of the Crude Human Beings Whose Skulls Have Recently Been Found in China. But the Neanderthal Man Was Much More Intelligent and Survived for Many Thousands of Years While the Old Race in Prehistoric China Is Long Since Gone.



Cross Section of the Debris Lying on the Floor of a Cave Inhabited by Prehistoric Man. Science Is Able to Identify the Age of a Human Fossil Like the Pekin Man (C) Which Is Found Among the Remains of a Certain Period (B) Beneath Layers (A A), Which Contain the Bones of Animals Characteristic of the Epoch in Which They Lived

That all these creatures lived in caves at the same time as the Pekin man is evident from the intermingling of their bones, but the details of that interesting chapter are not clear. It is hard to believe that man slept under the same roof with any of them. More likely, desperate from hunger and cold, he sneaked in when the parent animals were away, clubbed the cubs, ate them raw and then rolled boulders in front of the mouth of the cave. Aided by this barrier, with clubs and stones he and his wife and children perhaps repulsed the rightful owners of the cave when they returned to avenge their young and perhaps not.

The big carnivora often bring their kills home if the cave is not too distant. This habit must have been a constant temptation to slow-footed man, armed only with club and stones. Even if he had another cave of his own, the den of one of these great hunting beasts must have lured him as a jewelry store does a burglar. Undoubtedly he would watch with hungry eyes staring from their bony sockets as his brute neighbors dragged home one of the herbivorous animals too large and swift for man to hope to catch or kill. If later he saw both the male and the female leave the cave, there was his chance to raid the treasure house and get away with the uneaten part of the carcass. Probably it was still fresh, and if not it did not matter. He was not fussy.

Of course, if the absent tenants happened to return in the midst of things, it was just too bad, and, for all anyone knows, that may have been just what caused the Pekin man and woman to leave their skulls in that cave. Our own ancestor, who was a greater refinement on the Neanderthal man than the Neanderthal was on the Pekin man, lived no life of ease and luxury, but it was less unendurable from modern standpoints, chiefly because he had the use of fire. He could always insure himself a night's sleep free from four-footed marauders by keeping a fire going at the mouth of the cave. Even if the fire got low he had a dog, whose keen ears and nose would cause it to sound a warning the moment anything approached.

Many of the vegetarian animals, whose carcasses primitive man probably stole from the carnivora, belonged to species which have long since disappeared from the earth. Over the flat plains ran herds of animals resembling the horse in form, but smaller. There was also a great bull, a relative of the aurochs, and a species of rhinoceros unknown today. A stag with long horns and palm-like feet, and jaws so heavy that they seemed to be deformed, lurked in the forest. An enormous wild boar, similar to those which are found in the Tertiary strata of India, was another creature of this fauna which has no living representative today. Together with them lived many species which have survived to our time—the wild horse, red deer, bison and macacus monkey.

Such were the surroundings in which this mysterious creature lived, and in which he died like an animal without his fellow beings understanding how to give him any formal burial in this great cave where men have just found his bones after a sleep of more than a million years.

While the discovery of the Sinanthropus excites our curiosity greatly, it does not satisfy it. It acquaints us with a distant member of what was unquestionably a human race, but which is certainly not our race, and which has left no descendant.

Between the man of today and the Neanderthal man there has always existed a gulf as deep as that which separates the lion from the tiger, or the horse from the donkey, and we know that the two types did not mix together. It is extremely likely that the savage and brutal Neanderthal man was completely exterminated by his human rival, who was much more intelligent and active. His fate was only like that of the gorillas and the orang-utans who have been hunted by men until today they are almost at the point of extinction.

We must consider the Pekin man as an extinct type differing from those which we know today, just as the big-jawed deer, the three-toed horse and the sabre-toothed tiger are different from the existing deer, horse and tiger. To use a simple comparison, the present animals are not descendants of the earlier ones, but only very distant cousins.

To many persons it still remains incredible that scientists can dig out of the ground a piece of a human skeleton and say with assurance it belonged to a man who lived 10,000, 100,000 or 1,000,000 years ago. Sometimes, indeed, he cannot tell very well but usually by examining the soil in which the fossil is found he can estimate its age from his knowledge of when that stratum of rock or sand or earth was deposited.

Also, fortunately, the cave man's wife was anything but a neat housekeeper and had a habit of dating her existence by leaving on the floor of the cave the bones of the animals she and the family had eaten. The labor of thousands of paleontologists has determined when these various species appeared in different parts of the earth, flourished and became extinct. If human bones are found in the soil of a cave at the same level as those of the cave bear or the sabre-toothed tiger, science can tell quite accurately when that man lived, for the reigns of the monster bear and old sabretooth were quite short. But if the animal bones are those of a macacus monkey or the opossum, they tell him almost nothing, for these creatures are older than the first human being and are still alive today.

The dating of the extinct animals and of the various formations was done in many ways, each one corroborating the evidence of the others, and confirmed by fossils of the vegetable kingdom. The rate at which rocks are worn by atmospheric conditions, the retreat of waterfalls, eating their way back through solid rocks, the deposit of mud at the bottoms of seas and lakes, the changing of sea levels with the coming and going of the ice in the ice ages, which alternately withdrew and returned enormous quantities of water from the oceans, locking it up in the form of ice on the continents.

By these more than forty proofs and checks, it has been established when the various prominent species of plants and animals arose, flourished and became extinct. As if to prevent any doubts of it the cave man himself, with amazingly well-developed art, painted on his cave walls some animals now long extinct, proving that the modern scientist had accurately reconstructed them from their fossil bones.

Many relics of prehistoric man have been found accidentally by workmen digging foundations. But others, including the Pekin man, are the result of much thought and persistent hunting by scientists over a long period.

About ten years ago several scientists, seeking for fossil animals in China, found among the numerous relics they picked up two scattered teeth which they believed to be those of a human being, although some characteristics of the teeth did not permit absolute certainty on this point.

This discovery was made about 3 miles southwest of Pekin in a district known as Chou Kou Tien. In this place are the lower levels of the hills of Shan-Si, which surround the great plain of Tchi-Li. The hills are formed of a blue calcareous rock, very hard, but penetrated by deep fissures which are filled with a red earth very rich in fossils. The two teeth in question were found in one of these fissures together with many bones of various animals. The unusual and somewhat abnormal character of this discovery caused excavations to be pursued with renewed energy in the neighborhood.

In 1926 the Geological Survey of China, cooperating with the Rockefeller Foundation, drew up a great plan of excavation which, in the years that have passed since then, has made it possible to dig up 11,700 cubic yards of rock and fossil bearing soil under the most difficult conditions.

The excavations were under the direction of the most expert scientists in the world in this line, including Dr. Wong, director of the Geological Survey of China, and his confreres, Messrs. Li and W. C. Pei, as well as Dr. Davidson Black, Professor of Anatomy at the Union Medical College of Pekin; Dr. B. Bohlin and Dr. C. Young and Father Teilhard de Chardin, one of the most distinguished masters of paleontology in France.

Such labors and such collaboration were sure to produce remarkable results. In the course of last year the experts dug up, in addition to 1,500 cases of various animal fossils, several human fragments, and finally, at the greatest depth of the excavation, and on the last day of the season, a skull, which immediately excited the liveliest interest by its peculiar anatomical characteristics. The latter at the first glance revealed that the being of which these bones belonged was altogether different from the men of the present day. It was the first of the two Pekin skulls.

All these fragments were entrusted to Dr. Davidson Black, in order that he might make a study of them. Neither this study nor the excavations have been completed, and further surprising discoveries are looked for.

As science recreates these interesting creatures of the past who fought vainly to survive, one thing becomes apparent to everyone, that

Susan Alters Matters.

CAROL ran along the beach in the dawn. The wind had gone down and no cloud showed in the paling sky. The sea was still high, roaring and tossing like a disturbed bull, giving out angry bellows as it dashed over the white beach, so ghostly in the time before sunrise. The door of Hendry's store stood wide open and the men whose ships had battled for very life all through the night squinted seaward, their eyes piercing the faint light in anxious search for their boats. They waved a careless salutation to the slim figure as Carol sped past, but she paid no heed. Her breath came sharply, in her eyes was fear. She fled past them all towards Hendry's.

Up on to the porch of Hendry's store Carol dashed.

"Hendry, Hendry!"

"What is it?"

She caught his arm.

"It's Susan. Oh, Hendry, bring your brandy. I think she's dead. She's lying under a palm that's over her chest."

Already some of the men were running toward the cottage where Carol and old Susan lived. Here Hackett used to return when he came back from sea. Here he had brought Carol five years ago. Here she had grown up under the careless eye of Susan, who followed closely Solomon's precept anent sparing the rod.

And now Susan lay on her back, her rheumy old eyes wide open, her wrinkled hands still pressed against the palm that had driven the breath from her body. They rolled the tree away at last and Hendry felt for a heart beat. There was no sign of life and he corked up his flask again.

"Dead," he said briefly.

They carried her into the airless little room that she had always called her parlor, where on a center table were bound volumes of Good Words for 1856 and 1881, a piece of coral under a glass case, and three conch shells on woollen mats. The walls were washed a cool blue, and four pictures hung there—a steel engraving of the Day of Judgment, Abraham in blue offering up Isaac in green, a particularly bloody presentment of the Death of Rufus, and, inexplicably, a colored plate of the Bacchus and Ariadne.

As Bruce stooped to enter the low doorway the flaming colors caught his eye. He looked at the crabbed face of the dead woman and wondered what obscure instinct, what hidden craving for beauty was betrayed by the presence of that immortal pair.

He and Marlowe and Monty Hawes stood awkwardly in that prim room that might have been lifted straight from an English fishing village. The sun was rising through a watery mist. His first beams shot through the unshuttered window and fell on Carol, standing white and mute by that figure grown quiet at last.

Hendry shook his head.

"A bad end," he said. "It's ill to die struggling. Why did she go out, Carol?"

Carol shook her head.

"I don't know, Hendry. What—what am I going to do now?"

"Do?"

"Yes, I'm alone."

Hendry scratched his head.

"Ye can't bide here, that's certain. Van Kloort will have a say in it."

At the name a dull color swept into her pale face.

"No," she spat at him. "I'm blamed if I'll go near him."

"Whist," said Hendry. "After all, he's the Resident. You needn't think you can stand against whatever he orders."

"Ay, he's the boss on Les Aves," Monty put in. "Hendry's right. You'll have to do what Van Kloort says. Ain't he the one to protect you? Ain't that part of his job?"

"I won't," Carol shouted at them, regardless of the dead. "He's a beast."

"Then what will you do?" demanded Monty, exasperated. "A young female can't live alone, especially with Kanakas all round. You'll have to go up to the House" (so Van Kloort's place was always called) "or else heaven knows what'll become of you. There's no other white woman on the island except Mrs. Van Kloort."

"There—"

"Do you call Fanchon a woman?"

"Oh, shut up!" The tears were starting in Carol's eyes. "I won't go up to the House. I hate Mrs. Van Kloort, a little withered thing, like a wisp of smoke in Van Kloort's pipe. I'm going to stay here. It's rotten that women have to do what men say all the time."

"Rot," said Bruce sternly. "You're upset, that's what's the matter with you. You little fool, you know what the Kanakas are. They were afraid of Hackett, they were afraid of Susan. But as soon as they know you're here alone—"

She stopped him, imperiously.

"Chuck it, Bruce. All right. I'll go up to Hendry's for a bit."

Her eyes turned to Susan.

"What about her?"

"We'll see to that," Monty said hastily. "You go up along with Hendry."

They watched the slight figure toiling up the beach road with Hendry until it was out of sight among the palms. Monty Hawes rooted round in an outhouse and unearthed a rusty spade. The ground was heavy after last night's rain and before long the three of them were sweating with the effort of digging Susan's grave. The padre from Waihiti only came once in three months. It was to be hoped someone would think to bring him over to say a prayer for Susan's soul.

They dug deep into the sucking oozy soil. Marlowe found an old packing case and fashioned a rough coffin. Carefully they laid the stiffening body within it and Monty fitted the boards to nail it down.

"Wait a minute," said Bruce.

"Now where's he gone?" demanded Monty. "Poor old lady, she was a wry one with her tongue. Heaven knows who she was. Did you ever hear? No, nor me either. Hackett picked her up somewhere to look after the kid."

"What's the fool got now?"

Bruce came back, his hands loaded with hibiscus flowers. He flung them on the withered body till it lay hidden beneath a bank of blooms white, yellow and flaunting scarlet, emblems of the evanescent beauty of the islands, of youth, of life itself.

Between them they carried the coffin outside and Marlowe read the burial service from a tattered book which he found in the hut.

Up at Hendry's Carol sat sullenly on a high stool and waited for Van Kloort.

Hendry had endured defiance, tears, vituperation and then gone imperturbably to find Van Kloort. He knew enough of that gentleman to realize that Van Kloort would resent furiously any omission to acquaint him with the exact state of affairs at the earliest moment possible. Carol might scream the place down—she'd do that anyhow—but Hendry turned his back on her, put on a clean apron and trudged away to the House.

"You little savage!"

At the lazy voice she looked up, stormy-eyed, to find Ridley lounging in the open doorway. His dark eyes looked intently into hers, his thin cruel lips were parted in a smile. Something about him set her trembling. She had grown up among men, familiar with their moods, their oaths, their desires. As surely as though he had spoken she knew what Ridley's eyes said to her.

Panic seized Carol, the swift panic of sudden menace. The store spun round for one stupefying moment before her nerve came back, and she became aware that Bill was growling, his lean body set squarely before her where she sat on Hendry's stool.

"Sulky?"

Ridley's eyes slid over her body, resting on the sun-kissed throat, the rounded thighs, the exquisite lines of her breasts under the thin frock. So this was what Hackett's leggy child had become. Odd, that she should change in the night, as it were. Who would have thought that she could have grown into a beauty?

His palate had become jaded with a hundred amours. His handsome insolence was a key that unlocked the hearts of women from Degas to Waihiti. With success had come boredom. What pleasure is there in conquest when the enemy surrenders before the sword is out? With hands [illegible] from the warm, full-bosomed Marquesans to the petulant loveliness of the Governor's wife on Degas Island had he met with resistance, until that moment. And here was this slim girl, all fire and spirit, her piquant face hard with defiance, her [illegible] eyes giving him back stare for stare. A wild cat, he told himself, an untamed, unleashed animal that would fight and struggle and claw, and he quivered [illegible] at last.

He took a step into the room.

"Is that right, that Susan's dead?"

She nodded.

"Do you care very much?"

"She used to beat me when I was a child," said Carol meditatively, "and I was always afraid of her. Besides, she used to sing psalms all day long. It gets so tiring. One day I asked her why she didn't sing the song of Solomon instead. I thought she'd hit me for asking, but she didn't. She gave me a queer look, though."

"If she's dead," said Ridley,

Sure Way to Get Rid of Dandruff

There is one sure way that never fails to remove dandruff completely and that is to dissolve it. Then you destroy it entirely.

To do this, just get about four ounces of plain, ordinary liquid arvon; apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

By morning, most, if not all, of your dandruff will be gone, and two or three more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it, no matter how much dandruff you may have.

You will find, too, that all itching and digging of the scalp will stop instantly, and your hair will be lustrous, glossy, silky and soft, and look and feel a hundred times better.

You can get liquid arvon at any drug store and four ounces is all you will need. This simple remedy has never been known to fail.

LUCKIES are always kind to your throat

Everyone knows that sunshine mellows—that's why the "TOASTING" process includes the use of the Ultra Violet Rays. ### SALMON (or TUNA FISH) LOAF (Illustration A)

(6 Servings)

1 level tablespoonful Knox Sparkling Gelatine
¼ cup cold water
Yolks of two eggs
1 teaspoonful salt
1 teaspoonful mustard
1½ tablespoonfuls melted butter
¾ cup milk
2½ tablespoonfuls mild vinegar or lemon juice
1 can salmon, tuna or crabmeat
Few grains cayenne or paprika

Soak gelatine in cold water about five minutes. Mix egg yolks, slightly beaten, with salt, mustard and cayenne (if more seasonings are desired, add more paprika or a few drops Worcestershire Sauce); then add butter, milk, and vinegar. Cook in double boiler, stirring constantly, until mixture thickens. Add soaked gelatine and salmon, separated into flakes. Turn into wet mold, chill, and remove to bed of crisp lettuce leaves.

NOTE: If no fish mold is available this salmon mixture may be molded in a wet shallow pan. When firm, unmold and cut out in fish shape—using a paper pattern and a sharp knife. Cut pimentos in thin strips and arrange on fish—outlining the head and tail—cut small pieces to represent eye and mouth. Or use a whole clove for eye. (The pieces of the fish mixture cut away should be served on lettuce leaves and act as border on dish—or use for a sandwich filling.)

PERFECTION SALAD (Illustration B)

(6 Servings)

1 level tablespoonful Knox Sparkling Gelatine
¼ cup cold water
¼ cup mild vinegar
¼ cup sugar
1 tablespoonful lemon juice
1 cup boiling water
½ teaspoonful salt
½ cup cabbage, finely shredded
1 cup celery, cut in small pieces
1 pimento, cut in small pieces, or 2 tablespoonfuls sweet red or green peppers

Soak gelatine in cold water about five minutes; add boiling water, vinegar, lemon juice, sugar and salt. When mixture begins to stiffen, add remaining ingredients. Turn into wet mold and chill. Remove to bed of lettuce or endive. Garnish with mayonnaise dressing, or cut in cubes and serve in cases made of red or green peppers, or turn into molds lined with canned pimentos. Use fruits instead of vegetables in the above and you have a delicious Fruit Salad.

How to Use Evaporated Milk in Making Whipped Cream—WHIPPED EVAPORATED MILK

Soak one-half teaspoonful Knox Sparkling Gelatine in two teaspoonfuls cold water about five minutes. Boil the unopened can (6-ounce can) evaporated milk in a dish of water ten minutes. Remove from fire, open can and while hot stir the soaked gelatine in the can of milk to dissolve. Turn into a chilled dish and allow to become thoroughly cold. Add confectionery sugar, and flavor to taste. Whip until stiff. Note: If allowed to stand a few minutes before serving this will thicken. If a heavy whipped cream is desired, increase the gelatine to one teaspoonful soaked in one tablespoonful cold water, and proceed as above.

PINEAPPLE ICE BOX CAKE (Illustration C)

(12 Servings—For 6 Servings use half of recipe)

2 level tablespoonfuls Knox Sparkling Gelatine
½ cup cold water
1 can crushed pineapple
¼ teaspoon salt
½ cup sugar
1 tablespoonful lemon juice
1½ cups cream or evaporated milk
Lady fingers or stale sponge cake

Soak gelatine in cold water about five minutes, dissolve over hot water and add pineapple, sugar, salt and lemon juice. Stir until all gelatine and sugar have dissolved. When it begins to thicken, beat and fold in whipped cream. Line sides and bottom of large square or round mold with lady fingers. Cover with pineapple cream mixture, then alternate cakes and cream until mold is full. Place in ice box and let stand three or four hours. Unmold on a large cake plate and garnish with whipped cream and fruit in season.

KNOX BERRY PIE (Illustration D)

(6 Servings)

1 level tablespoonful Knox Sparkling Gelatine
¼ cup cold water
1 cup cream
1 pint berry juice and berries
Few grains salt

Soak gelatine in the cold water about five minutes; add boiling fruit juice and when almost set, add berries and pour into baked pastry shell. When firm and ready to serve, cover top with cream or evaporated milk, whipped, sweetened and flavored with vanilla. This recipe is for canned fruit, but fresh fruit may be used. The egg meringue may be used on top instead of cream and browned a moment in the oven. Chill and serve.

[illegible] you going to do? You [illegible] alone."

She glanced at him shrewdly.

"How do you know I'll be alone?"

He saw his error, and strove hastily to retrieve it.

"They were saying last night that Hackett wasn't seen near [illegible] Henry."

"That doesn't prove he's dead," Carol retorted sharply. [illegible] dismissed the subject with an air of boredom.

"Anyway you'll have to go somewhere now even if he does come back," he insisted. "It's no use sitting there like a thunder-cloud. You know as well as I do you can't stay down in the hut alone."

"Why not?"

"You fool, don't you know what the Kanakas are?"

"It's not only kanakas I'd need to fear," said Carol.

"Where's Hendry?" he said abruptly.

"Gone to fetch Van Kloort."

Ridley nodded.

"Best thing he could do. You'd better go up there and live for a bit. Mrs. Van will look after you."

"Huh!" said Carol. "She couldn't look after a flea. What are you kidding yourself like that for? Are you going around pretending she's going to be a kind of benevolent aunt to the poor orphan cheeild? Why, she ought to be in a home for the feeble-minded."

Ridley laughed.

"You've a spicy tongue," he said. "Well, if you won't go there, what will you do? There's only—only Fanchon."

"I'd cut my throat before I went there," said Carol. "Oh, here's Van Kloort."

CHAPTER VI.

At the House.

VAN KLOORT came in heavily and settled his ponderous body firmly on a chair. He took out a purple handkerchief and mopped his bald yellowish head and his streaming face. Then he hitched the knees of his immaculate whites, straightened his tie, and took the glass that Hendry had filled. He tossed it off and wiped his mouth with an "A-ah" of satisfaction. These preliminaries over he looked round for Carol.

When at last he saw her glowering at him from her stool, his forehead creased in a frown.

"What's all this?" he said in his thick, throaty voice. "Old Susan's dead, hey? And you're alone?"

"How do you know I'm alone?"

"Well, well," said Van Kloort, testily, "your father's not back is he? Don't suppose he'll ever come back if he was out last night. Dear me, no. Quite impossible. Well," grudgingly, "you'll have to come up to the House."

"I don't want to."

"That's not of the least consequence," said Van Kloort, puffing like a fat seal with heat and annoyance. "Do you think I'm going to have you larking about the islands by yourself?—'s not proper—'s not done. I'm surprised at you. Not so much soda, Hendry. You'll drown it."

"But suppose I want to live by myself."

Van Kloort emptied his glass and glared at her.

"I won't allow you to live by yourself."

He moistened his lips.

"I'll send a woman down to pick up your things, and you'll come up to the House with me, now—at once."

"I won't!"

"You're very tiresome," said Van Kloort. "No soda at all, Hendry. Now, look here, you young baggage, you'll do what I say. Unnerstand me? Unnerstand me, hey?"

"You needn't yell at me," said Carol, resentfully. "I heard you the first time. Oh, all right, I'll come."

"I should think so," panted Van Kloort. "Yes, I sh'd blame well think so."

He hoisted himself out of his chair and reached for his Panama.

"Send up some more Perrier," he called over his shoulder to Hendry. "Before lunch. Now, Carol, are you coming?"

She slid down from her stool and followed him rebelliously. Ridley stood aside for her to pass. A less practised hand would have snatched a caress, but Ridley bided his time. Carol went out into the sunshine and Ridley looked after her as she slouched behind Van Kloort on the narrow road that led uphill to the House. A bush-hen fled at their approach, scuttling away from her sandy nest. Ridley, watching, saw Carol pull a strip of jasmine and fling it round her shoulders as she passed out of sight at the bend of the road.

He became aware that Marlowe and Bruce stood behind him. He did not turn his head after the first startled glance, but the short hairs at the back of his neck pricked upright.

"Leopard all right?" said Bruce.

"Yes."

"It's more than the Jean-Marie is."

"What's that to do with me?"

"Seen Hackett yet?"

Ridley's tongue flicked his dry lips.

"No."

"That's queer."

"How do you mean—queer? His boat's not in harbor."

"His boat's at the bottom most likely."

"Then why do you keep asking whether I've seen him? He can't come in without his boat, can he?"

"There's no saying what the dead can do," said Marlowe.

Ridley swung round to face them.

"Dead? How do you know?"

Marlowe turned away and went into the store. Left alone with Bruce, Ridley laughed jerkily.

"Guess Marlowe's had a couple."

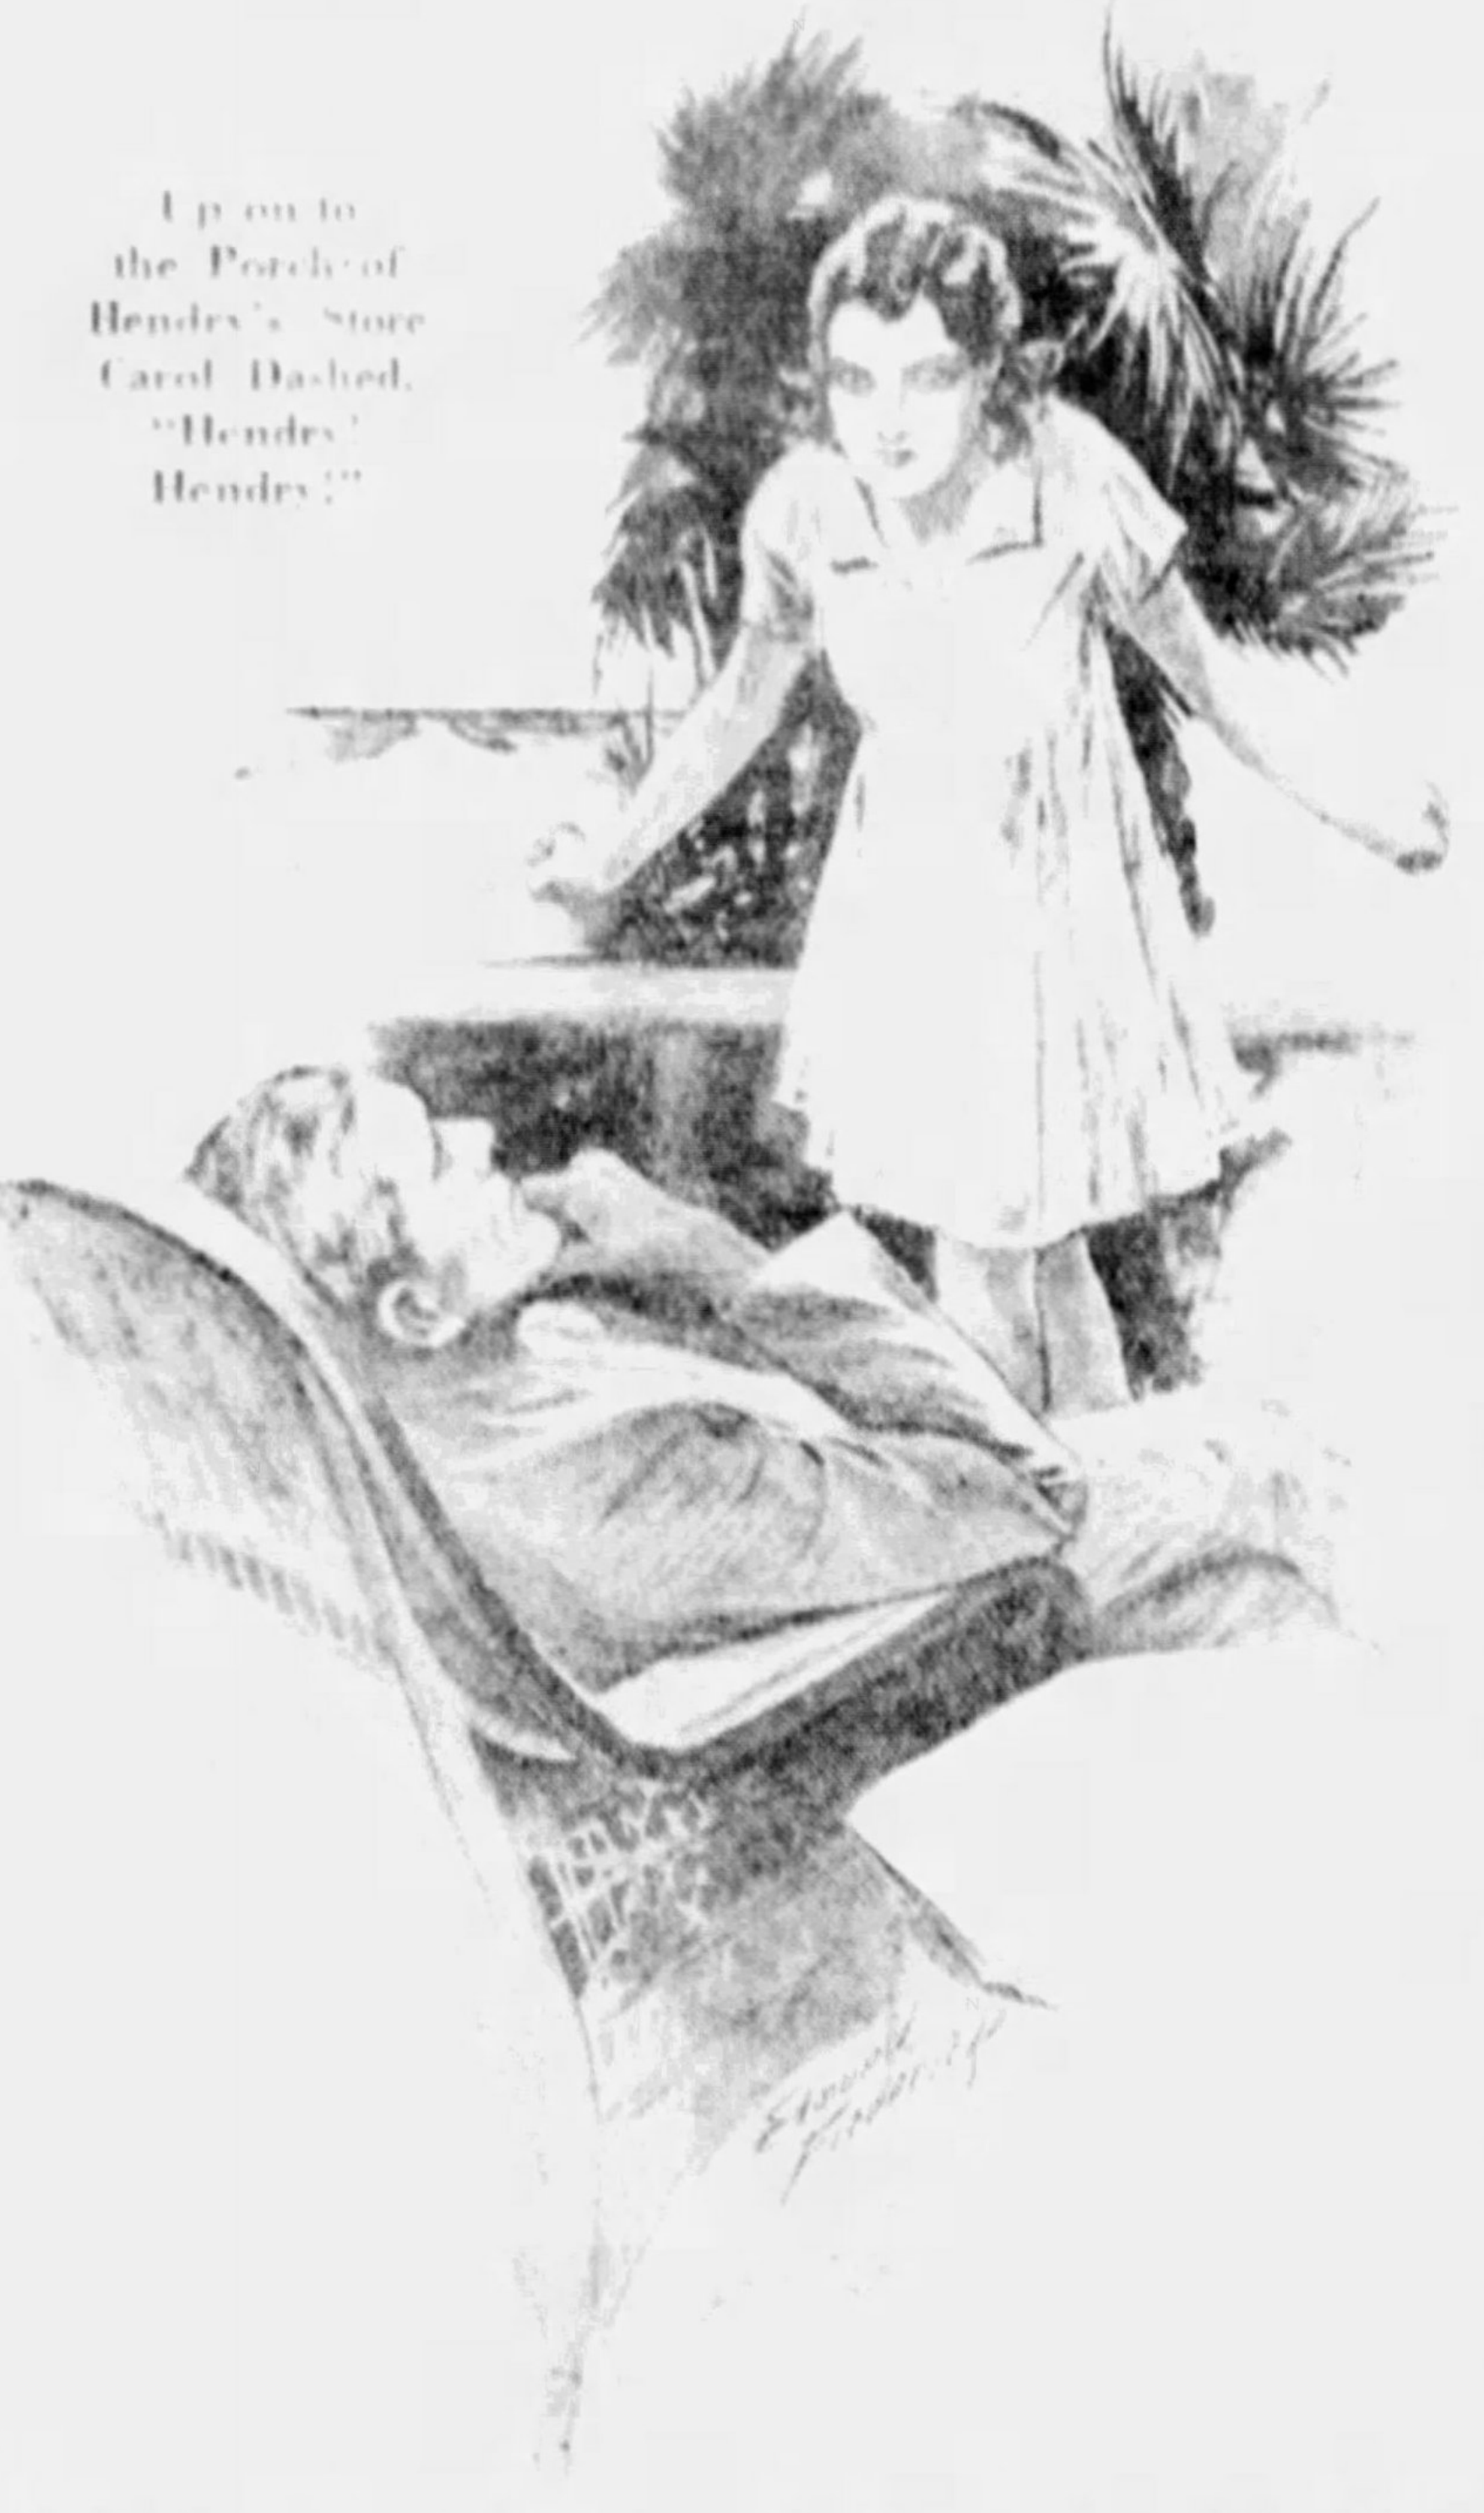
"He's not. Here, has Carol gone up with Van Kloort?"

"Yes."

"Then I'm going up after her."

"You? What for?"

"Because I choose," said Bruce, and flung off up the road.



Up on to the Porch of Hendry's Store Carol Dashed. "Hendry! Hendry!"

Marlowe in the middle of a Pink Gin choked at the sight.

"Blamed fool," he said to Hendry. "Look at him, raising dust like that. He'll set old Van's back up like a Tomcat. Why couldn't he wait?"

"Maybe he's found it's safer not to wait when it's a question of Van Kloort," Hendry surmised. "Close the shutters. This day's going to be hot."

"Guess we'll all be quite acclimatized time we get down below," said Marlowe. "Where's Ridley off to?"

Hendry peered over his shoulder.

"He's away up to the House," he said, watching the tall body with its panther-like walk.

"My word, it'll be quite a little Dorcas Meeting," Marlowe grinned. "Van Kloort and Carol and Ridley and Bruce. Now what do you suppose they'll talk about?"

He patted his gun and his blue eyes grew grave.

"Guess I'll hang around outside in case they want any needles threaded," he said.

"What's up wi' ye all?" said Hendry.

But Marlowe was gone, keeping in the shadow of the bushes as he followed Ridley towards the House. Who could say how this coil would end? How much did Van Kloort know? How much did Ridley fear?

The stinging peki left its mark on his hands as he pursued his tangled way. The sweet jasmine filled his nostrils with its scent. He paused for a moment, looking back across the harbor where the Helen tugged at anchor, impatient to feel the open sea below her keel. All round him rose the odor of Les Aves, the smell of wet earth and wet leaves steaming in the sunshine.

A giant lizard walked leisurely by, its glistening back so close that he could have touched it. Overhead the parakeets screamed and chattered, brilliant flashes of crimson and emerald and gold against the blue of the sky. So beautiful was Les Aves that a man might forget the cruelty of her, the sinister crawling heart and the treachery that lurked there, remembering only her loveliness under the morning sky.

A man was coming down the path. Marlowe drew back out of sight to watch him go past. It was Scarlett. He walked slowly, and in his eyes was the look that Fanchon had put there, a look in which fear and remembered desire and sick shame fought for mastery. He walked as one stricken blind, stumbling and righting himself, glancing neither to left nor right, lurching onward to the harbor.

The House was in sight, a long, low building that showed white through the palm trees. It stood on high ground and Van Kloort had planted orange trees around it. Already the shutters were closed against the heat. In the porch sat Mrs. Van Kloort, well in the shade, with a scarlet parasol rolled up beside her. She was a small nervous woman whom her husband had married in a fit of mental aberration. Her pale, indeterminate face had an habitual look of listening. It was true that she was always listening—for sound of Van Kloort. She was afraid of him and she had never given him a child.

Her faded blue eyes, keen from years of constant nervous watching for Van Kloort's next movement, saw Marlowe before he could get out of the way. She gathered up her sewing and made fussy movements to show that she expected him to go and sit by her.

"Oh, Mr. Marlowe, do come and sit by me out of the wretched heat. Isn't it hot today? Yes, it's really quite too wretchedly hot, don't you think?"

She had never learned to take the heat as a commonplace, a thing that would never alter. She pushed forward a chair, and Marlowe creaked into its flimsy wickerwork with qualms of dismay.

"Won't you have the stool and put your feet up? I always like to put my feet up. I think it's so beneficial, you know."

"Thank you," said Marlowe. "No, I won't, if it's all the same to you."

He was looking round with alert, veiled eyes. His ears were trained to catch a sign of Bruce. Where had the fool got to? And Carol, where was she?

Mrs. Van Kloort sewed on busily. She was seated in a rocking chair that she rocked in maddening fashion.

"Such sad news for a bright morning, isn't it, Mr. Marlowe? Dear me, yes, poor old Susan. And that terrible girl . . ."

Marlowe stiffened.

". . . that really terrible girl that Mr. Van Kloort would insist on bringing up here. Oh, yes, I know of her, and I've seen her rushing about the beach with that mongrel dog. Of course one feels sorry for such people, and Mr. Van Kloort insisted on bringing her here until her father comes home. So inconsiderate of him not to be at home at such a time."

"She had to go somewhere."

"Yes, but why here? I mean it's so upsetting, because we have so few visitors to stay, and, of course, it's not as if she were a lady. I beg your pardon!"

"I'm afraid I'm taking up your time," said Marlowe. "Is Bruce

"But she explained so nicely how anyone might offend and not know it. Our pores give off a whole quart of odor-causing waste daily, she told me. We become so used to this ever-present odor that we don't notice it in ourselves. But we instantly notice 'B.O.' in other people, and it is always offensive.

So easy to be safe

"How glad I am that I followed her advice and adopted Lifebuoy as my toilet soap. For now I have many more friends than formerly. Girls in the office and outside. Boys, too, invite me to the movies and to dances—and I frankly admit that they never used to!

Use Powder

Do as Your Dentist does—when he cleans your teeth

Powder Cleans and Whitens Teeth—as nothing else can

There is nothing known that will clean and polish teeth so quickly and leave them so gleaming white—as POWDER.

That is why your dentist, when cleaning your teeth, as you know—always uses powder.

As it is only the powder part of any dentifrice that cleans, a dentifrice that is ALL POWDER just naturally cleans best.

Dr. Lyon's Tooth Powder IS ALL POWDER—100% cleansing properties. This is more than twice the cleansing properties of tooth pastes.

Dull Teeth Become White

For over SIXTY YEARS—dentists everywhere have prescribed Dr. Lyon's Tooth Powder, because—teeth simply cannot . . . remain dull and film coated when it is used.

It cleans off all stains and tartar, and polishes the teeth in a harmless and practical way that leaves them sparkling—many shades whiter.

In use over 60 years

No Glycerine—No Grit

Being an ALL POWDER dentifrice, Dr. Lyon's contains no glycerine, therefore does not soften the gums. It is free from all grit or pumice and cannot possibly scratch, or injure, the softest enamel, as years of constant use have shown.

Dr. Lyon's is the only dentifrice old enough to prove it can be safely used for life.

Neutralizes Acids

In addition to cleansing, it is probably the greatest neutralizer known for ACID MOUTH, being many times more effective than Milk of Magnesia.

Dr. Lyon's Tooth Powder keeps your teeth REALLY CLEAN and clean teeth mean—firm, healthy gums, freedom from pyorrhea and the least possible tooth decay.

Brush your teeth with Dr. Lyon's regularly—consult your dentist periodically—and you will be doing ALL that you can possibly do, to protect your teeth.

Lasts Longer—Costs Less

Once you use Dr. Lyon's Tooth Powder, you will never be satisfied to use anything else. It leaves your teeth feeling so much cleaner, your mouth so refreshed, and your breath so sweet and pure.

Dr. Lyon's is not only doubly efficient, but it costs only half as much to use. Even a small package lasts twice as long as a tube of tooth paste.

Synopsis of Preceding Chapters.

HANDSOME young Guy Beauclerc is [illegible] enough to enjoy the leisurely existence of a man about town and patronize the smart London night clubs on an income left by his mother. [illegible] little [illegible], however, when Coralie Stafford, his American heiress sweetheart, breaks their engagement. Deprived of his income by the collapse of the stock market, he decides to earn a living and spite the spoiled Coralie by becoming a gigolo at the High-Fly Night Club.

Guy is tremendously attracted to a beautiful red-haired girl, Roslyn (Lyn) Gale, whom he catches smuggling a string of pearls belonging to Jaza Jackman, a movie star, from the club. He thinks Lyn a thief, but she is really the typist of Kane Redman, head of a publicity concern and only doing her part in a publicity stunt Redman has arranged for Jaza.

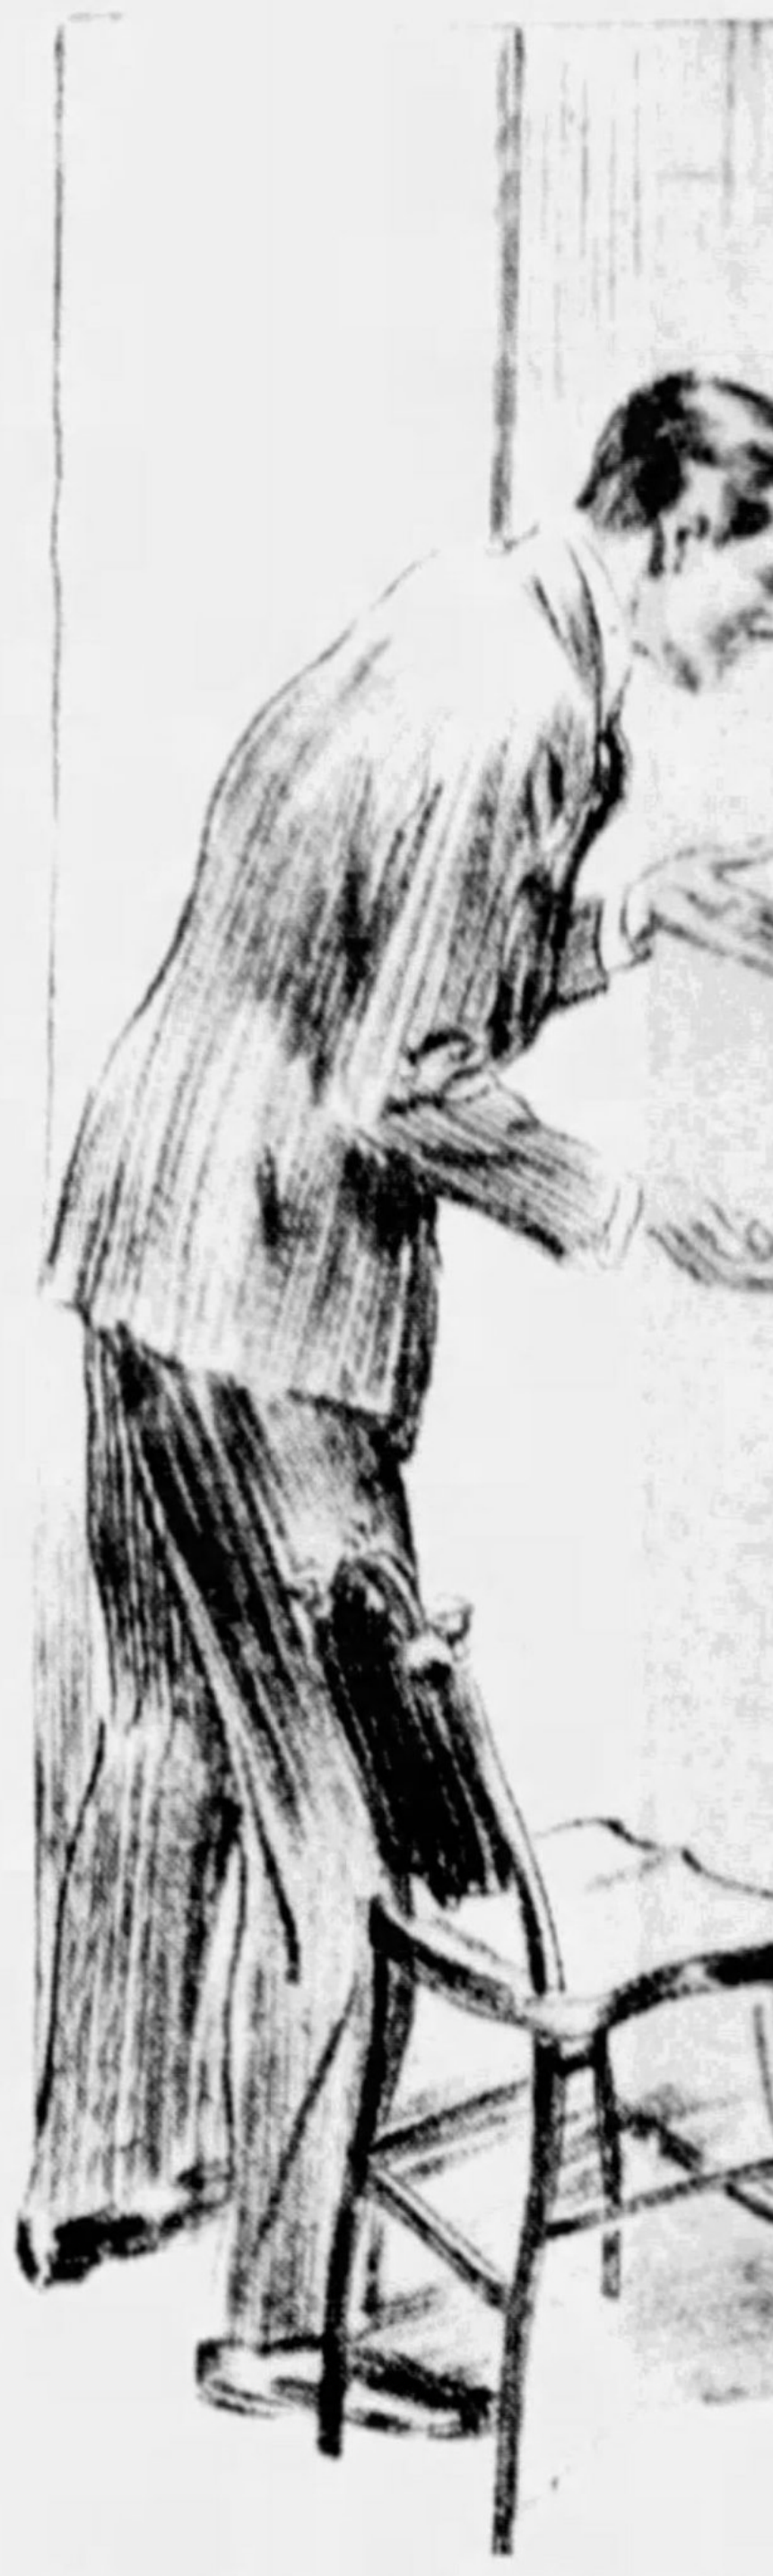
Kane Redman, a cynical man of many affairs with women, is much impressed by his typist's beauty, and decides to make her a star through publicity. Lyn, who is secretly in love with Kane, agrees with the proposal that he finance her wardrobe and dancing lessons and she repay him when she has become the greatest ballroom dancer in the world.

Hearing of Guy through Jaza, Kane signs him to a contract to appear as Mademoiselle Roslyn's dancing partner, then takes Lyn to Paris. In the meantime, Coralie attempts a reconciliation, begging Guy to marry her, but he, with Lyn's red hair and wistful beauty fast in his memory, realizes that he no longer loves Coralie and refuses. This makes the heiress more determined than ever to marry him.

The work of training over, Lyn and Kane return to London on a wave of publicity: royalty on the continent had flung jewels at the great Roslyn's feet, the crown prince of a Balkan state had shot himself because of her, a discarded nobleman husband was out for her blood, and since her beauty had brought such suffering to her, Mademoiselle Roslyn would only consent to appear in a mask.

When Guy meets Lyn, remembering Jaza's pearls and the newspaper stories, he takes her for an adventuress as well as a thief and is shocked into impoliteness. Thus their second meeting ends with their hating each other. Rehearsals go badly because of it until Guy suggests that they pretend they are friends and that she dance as though she were the girl he first thought her, that she put grace instead of hard dating into her dancing.

They create a sensation on their opening night at the High-Fly Club and both Guy and Kane realize that they love Lyn. Guy's reaction is to spurn Lyn's proffer of friendship, saying gruffly that they can never be "friends."



When Guy Spoke There Was Something Curious About the Sound of His Voice.
"You can't marry Kane, Lyn," He Said.

Opening Night.

LYN opened her eyes slowly, conscious that someone had entered the tiny room Ricardi had reserved for her to dress in. Kane, standing with his back against the closed door, was looking down at her, where she sat at her make-up table.

He said quietly the very words, oddly enough, he had used that first night: "You're beautiful, Lyn." But now, what a different note in his voice! There was passion in it, and wonder, and worship. She stared up into his eyes and saw—all that she had prayed she might see there some day. Kane had given her more than fame. He had given her the Prince—himself!

The silence lasted a long minute. Then the tension snapped. Lyn sprang to her feet. Her very nervousness forced a certain vivaciousness.

"Oh, I'm so happy, so happy," she laughed. "It was a success, wasn't it? You're not disappointed in me?"

He caught her to him, one arm about her waist. With the other hand he pushed back the hair off her forehead. Then, with a half-savage gesture, he ripped the tiny mask from her eyes. He stared down into them hungrily, as though half hoping, even then, to recapture the old Lyn—and his sanity. But still he saw only the image he himself had created. Glittering, infamous Roslyn, whom men had squandered their wealth upon, whom they had died for.

She gave a stifled sob, and whispered, "Don't look like that, Kane. . . . You frighten me."

He muttered thickly, "Why should you be afraid, Lyn? I love you. . . D'you hear me? I love you."

She murmured, her lips stiff and unnatural, "You love me."

How long had she waited to hear him say that? Years, it seemed, since that night in his Paris studio. She remembered that night, too vividly now. She must put it from her, that memory mustn't mar the wonder of this. He hadn't loved her then, otherwise he wouldn't have suggested. . . . But he did love her now. She could see it in his eyes. That made all the difference, didn't it? He would ask her to marry him, then she could give herself utterly to his love. She thought, "I'm happy. . . . Oh, I must be happy. Isn't this what I wanted?"

She closed her eyes. And then an odd thing happened.

It was no longer Kane's face she saw, but Guy's. . . . Guy with his lopsided smile; his almost black eyes that mocked her continually. And again she heard his voice, low and hoarse, "I can't be friends with you."

She opened her eyes with a start. What a strange illusion to have had while she was still lying in Kane Redman's arms. . . Incredible, almost. Because it was Kane she loved, of course, of course. . . . She had loved him since that first morning she had come to his office, weary, dispirited, struggling to keep herself and her dreams, but how hard it had been! Kane was her big handsome hero. He had done everything for her. . . . not that that matters when you're in love.

She could feel his hands slip down her back, he drew her closer. He was saying strange things, "You're mine, Lyn. I made you. You were nothing before, mere clay, but I breathed life and fire into you. You belong to me, because you would be lost without me. You see that, don't you?"

She pushed him a little away from her, gazing up at him, violet eyes wide with bewilderment. "I don't understand. . ."

He gave a harsh exultant laugh. "Don't you, Lyn? But you must. You were just a girl before, one of a thousand other girls of your kind in London. But I picked you out. I made you a thing of wonder and beauty and desire. Everything worth while about you I created."

But, at that, something cried out in Lyn. She was beginning to see what he meant, and it hurt, intolerably. He had said he loved her, but he only loved his own image of her. The real her underneath all this superimposed glitter he didn't care about. The Lyn who had lived so long in that tiny tawdry flat with her cat and her dreams didn't exist for him.

She continued to lie in his arms, but her heart ached, and she was nearer tears than laughter. Yet, did it really matter since he said he loved her? She would have him anyhow, and she couldn't give him up. Yet something had died in her, though, as yet, she didn't realize it.

Kane frowned. Her lack of response offended that ingrained conceit in most men's nature. He put his hand under her chin and moved her head from side to side gently. "What's the matter, Lyn? Tired? . . . I bet tonight was an ordeal for you. I ought to have thought of that. But you'll get used to it soon. Come back to my flat, there's supper all laid out. Caviare, champagne. We're going to celebrate the success of the famous Roslyn. Celebrate something else, perhaps . . ."

She shook her head. An intense weariness in her attitude. "Not tonight. I'm tired. . . ."

He moved impatiently. He raised her chin higher, forcing her to look up into his eyes. "Excuses, Lyn. Why?"

She bit her lips, admitting it.

"It takes more than a New Frock to give you REAL POISE" says Dorothy Dix

DAINTINESS IS MORE THAN frock-deep

DOROTHY DIX, famous writer on women's problems

"EVER since Eve discovered fig leaves, the best tonic for a woman's self-confidence has been—pretty CLOTHES!

"A colorful new frock—my, how it sets a girl up! But—and here is what some girls forget—it takes more than a new frock to give you real poise.

"Others may not know whether your LINGERIE is pretty and colorful and fresh, but YOU do. When it is—when you know that underneath, as well as on the surface, you're exquisite—you FEEL charming . . . Confident . . . Ready to conquer the world!

"Why not try these 2 simple rules:

1. Buy the loveliest lingerie you can.
2. Never let it get faded and drab looking.

"I wish I could make you feel how important this is! It's one of the secrets of every truly fascinating woman.

"Yet it's easy to manage even on small salaries. You know about LUX, I'm sure—I find that delicate pastel lingerie wears so long washed in Lux that it's not a bit extravagant. By 'long' I mean literally for YEARS. Lux—unlike the ordinary 'good' soaps—is made to preserve COLOR and CHARM.

"YOUR SURROUNDINGS, too, can help give you poise! When everything in your home—from pretty curtains to the colorful linens on your dinner table—is dainty and new looking, you feel confident, at ease. Here, too, Lux is your invaluable aid."

Now Whiten Teeth a Shade a Day

Do This To Remove Yellow and Stain, Prevent Decay—Teeth Whiten 3 Shades in 3 Days—Breath is Sweet

HERE'S a new and utterly different technique—recently perfected—that removes the real cause of stain, ugly yellow, decay and gum diseases—and makes it easily possible to whiten teeth a shade a day—3 shades whiter in 3 days.

Just do this: Morning and night, give your teeth and gums a Kolynos ANTISEPTIC FOAM BATH with a half-inch of Kolynos on a dry brush.

Then note the day-to-day improvement. Very soon teeth look cleaner and whiter than in years. Gums feel firmer and look healthier. The mouth and breath are sweet and fresh. Here's the reason:

Kolynos is unique. It succeeds where ordinary preparations fail because it becomes an antiseptic foam the very moment it enters the mouth. This foam gets into and cleans out every pit, fissure and crevice. It kills the millions of germs that swarm into the mouth with every breath, defy ordinary toothpastes and cause 95% of all tooth and gum troubles—190 million are killed in the first 15 seconds.

Gently this exhilarating, antiseptic foam bathes the teeth and gums—erases tartar and the mucoid coating—stimulates the gums—purifies the oral cavity—CLEANS TEETH AS THEY SHOULD BE CLEANED, RIGHT DOWN TO THE BEAUTIFUL, NAKED WHITE ENAMEL WITHOUT INJURY!

Thus stain and ugly yellow are removed. Decay is prevented. Teeth are kept sound and gleaming white. And gums are safeguarded against insidious disease.

Try the Kolynos Dry-Brush Technique. Start giving teeth and gums a Kolynos ANTISEPTIC FOAM BATH morning and night. You'll be glad you did. Teeth will be whiter than ever. Gums firmer and healthier. The mouth tingling with a clean, fresh taste. Buy a tube of Kolynos—today.

She forced her voice, but she didn't look at him as she said it, she couldn't. "I came to your flat in Paris, Kane. . . ."

He understood. He let go her wrists slowly and thrust his hands into his pockets.

"I see."

There was a longish pause. Lyn felt a throb of fear in her heart. Was she going to lose Kane? Even after he had admitted loving her?

But suddenly he smiled. A smile that acknowledged defeat.

"You're a blame little puritan, child."

She flung back her hair, a gesture of defiance. "Perhaps I am."

Then he laughed. A loud guffaw of laughter. "It's a good joke on me, but. . . . I'm going to marry you, Lyn."

CHAPTER XVIII.

Coralie Is Persistent.

LOWERING like a thunderstorm Guy had been about to stalk out of the club—though heaven knows what he had to be so angry about—when Ricardi planted his fat figure in his pathway.

"Allow me to congratulate you, Mr. Beauclaire. It was wonderful . . . marvelous." He gesticulated excitedly with his pudgy white hands.

"Rot!" Guy frowned down on him. "It wasn't me anyhow. It was her—Roslyn."

Something in his voice caused Ricardi to open one eye wide and shut it again. "Ah, she is ve-ry lovely, the Mam'selle Roslyn, is she not?" He chuckled and rubbed his hands together. "But she is young, surely, to have had all these famous love affairs we read about?"

Guy propped himself up against the wall and opened his cigarette case.

"You can't believe all you see in the papers. I don't suppose half of it is true."

"A half?" A childish grin spread over Ricardi's ugly features. He snapped his fingers. "I do not believe that much, my friend."

"How's that?" asked Guy. He offered the Italian manager a cigarette.

"Bah! I believe that it is publicity, most of it." Ricardi had been celebrating tonight's success with champagne and at the moment did not feel the urge of discretion. "A clever man, Mr. Kane Redman. Very clever. Of course, he doesn't always bring it off. There was the little incident of Miss Jackman's pearls . . ." But here, as though suddenly aware that he was letting his tongue run away with him, he pulled himself up short.

A curious expression had come over Guy's face. He was having a hard time to keep his habitual pose of nonchalance.

"Yes," he prompted softly. "As you were saying . . . the little incident of Miss Jackman's pearls . . . ?"

But Ricardi had remembered that discretion is a paying virtue. "What a good thing she recovered them, wasn't it?" he said genially. "It would have desolated me to have had the scandal of the theft attached to my club . . . Allow me to wish you good evening and good dancing, Mr. Beauclaire."

He was gone before Guy had time to question him further. But it is doubtful if Guy would have troubled. He was no fool and he knew Ricardi was no fool either.

Guy remained there, his back against the wall, smoking. So Kane Redman had had something to do with the theft of Jaza Jackman's pearls. Those pearls which he had found tied up in Lyn's handkerchief. What connection was there between the two? Suddenly he straightened himself, thinking, "I wonder if it was a put-up job? It might have been. . .And, if it were, then Lyn. . ."

Odd, the effect that thought had upon him. He found his hand shaking as he held the cigarette. He was hot one moment, cold the next with an intense sense of mortification.

What if he had insulted her needlessly? But, hang it all, why hadn't she explained? Yet, had he really given her a chance to explain? Hadn't he rather rushed in and accused her, taking her guilt for granted? His thoughts were confused. Somehow he must get to the bottom of this—and at once. It became a desperate need with him.

Tossing his cigarette on the floor he crushed it out with his heel. He must see Lyn at once, beg her to explain. But, a few minutes later when he tapped on the door of her dressing room, she was no longer there. A waiter told him he had seen her leave a few minutes before with Mr. Kane Redman.

"Blast it!" said Guy. "Blast that man Redman. What's he to her?"

Somehow he could stomach more easily the thought of her association with the foreign prince and all the rest of the scarlet cavalcade—if there had been such a cavalcade. But he had never, from the first, liked that fellow Redman. Why was he always hanging around Lyn?

He was her publicity agent, of course, but that was no explanation. His smile was just a shade too intimate when he talked to her. More than once it had filled Guy with the burning desire to up with his fist and give him a good hard crack on the jaw. Men like that had a way with women. What a pity, Guy reflected, women couldn't, occasionally, look at men through men's eyes. Whew, what confusion might result from it, though!

He smiled, cynically, wondering how he would fare were such a thing possible. "No better than the rest of them, I guess," he thought. "Though blamed if I see why!"

A waiter came up to him. "Beg pardon, Mr. Beauclaire, but a lady asked me to find you and bring you back to her table. Miss Stanton, I believe the name was, sir."

Coralie! So she was here, was she? Another instance of a woman's inability to say a final good-by. Still he could not very well refuse to speak to her.

The waiter led him to her table. Guy had his first taste of notoriety, as he wound through the tightly-packed tables in the supper room. Whispers everywhere, "There he is, that Beauclaire chap who danced with Roslyn."

Guy felt every head in the room turned in his direction, every woman's eyes appraising him. He thought, moodily, "I'll get a swelled head if this keeps up."

Then he found himself standing beside Coralie.

His first thought was, "She's perfect. . ."

His second thought, "Too perfect."

And his third, "Perfection in anything can be mighty dull." Which settled the fate of Coralie pretty thoroughly, as far as Guy was concerned.

Guy, of course, was prejudiced. A man in love is always prejudiced against the last lady of his heart. He sees in her a constant reminder of the changeableness of human affections.

Still, there was some truth in it. Coralie was just a shade too perfect. Her make-up bore the stamp of an artist; a man thought at first it was natural, then, when he discovered it wasn't, he felt annoyed at having been fooled. Her fair head was sleek and smooth, not one hair was to be found out of place. You felt that, in ruffling it, you would be spoiling a masterpiece. Such a dainty creature, she should be put on a pedestal and worshiped. But one man in a million is capable of a prolonged period of worship!

She gave Guy a small, carefully-manicured hand. "Hello, Guy . . . I want you to meet Dad, and Mr. Herron."

The men bowed to each other. Mr. Stanton had that extraordinarily innocent look of American business men of the older school. You wouldn't believe he had it in him to make sixpence, let alone millions. His was an open, and quite sweet countenance. A shock of white hair made him seem positively benign.

"I've heard a lot about you from Coralie, Mr. Beauclaire," he coughed and added: "You're a splendid dancer, I'd say."

"Sure." Mr. Herron backed him up, yet not so cordially.

Guy smiled crookedly. He sensed that both men were embarrassed. Neither, in their heart of hearts, looked upon exhibition dancing as a very he-man job.

"Sit down, Guy, do," urged Coralie. She flashed him a wistful half-smile and added, "That is, if you care to."

Guy had no alternative but to sit down.

Coralie was clever. She said at once, "I think that girl Roslyn is absolutely too divine. My, Guy, it must be great dancing with her." She appealed to Mr. Herron. "Isn't she gorgeous?"

Mr. Herron, who was fairly naive when it came to women, looked slightly surprised. Obviously he did not get the reason for Coralie's sudden change of front. Before Guy's appearance she had been speaking of the same Roslyn—but not in such glowing terms.

"She sure is," he said heartily.

Coralie rewarded him with a brilliant smile. A trifle too brilliant. Perhaps that was not what he had been intended to reply.

The waiter opened a fresh bottle of champagne. Coralie gave them the toast. "To Roslyn and Beauclaire."

They all drank it. Coralie smiled at Guy over the top of the glass. She lowered her voice, "Remember the first time we danced here, Guy?"

Guy remembered it, although he did not particularly want to. For him the High-Fly Club held only one memory—Lyn. Yet he felt ashamed when he looked across the table into Coralie's eyes. She was a nice girl and there had been a time. . .

As supper progressed he realized he was not popular with one member of the party. Harry Herron plainly resented the interest Coralie showed in him. Guy thought, "I hope Coralie reciprocates. . . I'd like her to be happy."

But of course Coralie didn't. Harry Herron was too easy. With a girl like Coralie it's a mistake to wear your heart on your sleeve. It was Guy she was after; Guy the elusive. True, she had once turned him down. But she had never intended him to take that seriously. She had meant to spur him on to some great endeavor. . but not, certainly not, to partnering the lovely golden Roslyn!

Mr. Stanton said, conversationally, "I guess you've heard of Harry's father—Francis I. Herron. He runs about the biggest private detective agency in the States."

"Of course Guy's heard of him," Coralie broke in. "You forget! Dad, that Guy is half American himself. His mother came from South Carolina."

"I'd forgotten," said her father. "Ever been to the States, Mr. Beauclaire?"

Guy smiled. "Often. I used to go with mother in the long school vacation." Then he turned to Mr. Herron. "Are you over here on business? Or isn't that a discreet question?"

"As a matter of fact I am," Harry Herron replied. "We opened up a branch of the business in London a year ago. Father has sent me over here to manage it for a while." He added, with a noticeable effort, "Look in some day."

Guy raised one eyebrow. "I will—when someone steals my reputation."

Coralie laughed. "Oh, you lost that ages ago, Guy. A man with a reputation is as bad as a girl without one!"

Mr. Stanton smiled. "I'm sure I never lost my reputation, Coralie."

"Fathers don't count," she squeezed his arm affectionately. "When a man becomes a father he ceases, from a girl's point of view, to be a man!" She sprang up from the table. "Come on and dance, Harry. I don't expect the great Guy Beauclaire to dance with me . . . since he's become a professional."

Kane's Gray Eyes Had Devoured Lyn in a Hungry, Insatiable Way.

The next moment she was dancing away in Harry Herron's arms. But, just before Harry had swung her out of sight, she caught her father's eye. That glance said, "Now's your chance, Daddy!"

Mr. Stanton sighed inwardly. All his life had been spent obeying glances: first his wife's, now Coralie's.

He lighted a cigar. "It's a real shame you and my girl broke up," he said tentatively.

Guy shifted uneasily in his chair. "You would hardly want her to marry a professional dancer, Mr. Stanton."

The elder man admitted it. "Coralie told me the circumstances," he said. "You lost your income, I believe, when the stock market broke. Too bad. Yes, I'll say it's too bad. . . . So you're young yet and, if you don't mind my asking, do you intend to keep on with this dancing?"

Guy flicked the ash off his cigarette. "I hadn't thought about it. I am under contract to dance with Mademoiselle Roslyn for three months."

There was a short pause. The waiter refilled their glasses, indicated that the bottle was empty, and hovered hopefully around for a fresh order.

But Mr. Stanton had something else on his mind. Presently he cleared his throat and said, "Why not come over to the States, young man? I could offer you a fair job in the bond selling business."

Guy leant back in his chair and let a thin spiral of smoke glide to the ceiling. "Somehow I don't think I'd be much of a success as a bond salesman. . . thanks all the same, Mr. Stanton."

By now Coralie and Harry Herron were back at the table. To avoid a further tete-a-tete on the subject of bond salesmanship, Guy asked Coralie to dance.

"I am honored," she mocked. "A professional so seldom deigns to join in with the common rabble . . . I bet every girl on the floor feels like scratching my eyes out!"

Guy frowned. Coralie's remarks had a way of getting under your skin. They danced for a time in silence. Presently, as her tiny blue satin shoes followed his black patent ones faultlessly, she raised her golden-irised eyes, and murmured, "Tell me about the famous Roslyn, Guy. Is she so utterly attractive? I suppose all these stories about men having killed themselves over her are true?"

"I suppose so," said Guy. He resented that intonation in Coralie's voice.

"But, of course, they must be true," she answered her own question.

Guy bit. "Why?" he demanded.

"Oh, nothing . . . I was only thinking after all the song and dance they're doing about her in the press that, if they weren't true, it might cause a bit of a scandal."

"I guess it would," said Guy shortly. It was not a subject he wished to pursue.

Coralie took the hint. But she turned the conversation on to a still more distressing subject for Guy—themselves. She raised herself higher on her toe points; her face drew closer to his.

"Still as stubborn as ever, Guy?"

He glanced down at her. "Meaning?"

She gave a low husky laugh. "Meaning—us."

He rumbled. "I thought it was agreed we were through."

She caught her lower lip. "Agreed by you."

"But hang it all, you wouldn't want to marry me as I am now . . . no money, no position."

Her golden eyes fired. "I'd marry you right this very moment."

Guy stumbled. He felt wretched. "Coralie . . . please."

"Because of your pride, Guy?"

He nodded. "Just that." The only thing to say. He didn't want to hurt her.

But she wasn't satisfied. She asked outright, "You're not keen on this Roslyn, Guy?"

He said, "No." Quickly. Vehemently. As though refuting something in his own mind.

Her lids dropped over her eyes. To hide the blaze of hatred there. So that was it. Guy had fallen for this red-haired girl whom half the men in the world were reputed to be in love with. This mysterious girl, who would not give up her name, who danced in a mask. Because she was too famous, they said. But . . . the thought came suddenly to Coralie . . . supposing it was because she was not famous enough?

Guy was glad when that dance was over, when he was able to return Coralie to her table and murmur an excuse for leaving her with her father and Harry Herron.

Coralie waved him an airy good-by. "So long, Guy. We're sure to meet again soon."

But, when Guy had left the upper room, her animation seemed to fall from her, as though a cloak had slipped. She said she was tired, and wished to go home. Yet when Harry, all solicitous, suggested they drop him at his hotel, Coralie insisted he come back to their flat and smoke a cigarette.

As the three of them drove through the moon-whitened London streets, up Piccadilly and into Mayfair, she lay back in her corner, her eyes half-closed. She looked utterly weary, yet, when at last she opened her eyes, there was an intense brightness in them.

"I'm curious about this dancer, Roslyn," she murmured to Harry. "Think you could find out something about her for me? You ought to be able to get all the gory details in your line of business."

"Now, Coralie," Mr. Stanton protested, "Harry doesn't want to waste his time . . ." But a look from her golden eyes stopped him. He coughed, and said instead, "Yes, it might be amusing to know all the inside dope."

Harry Herron, himself, though surprised by Coralie's request, murmured, "I guess I could get all the low down if I put a man on it, but it might take some time."

"Time? Time's no object," Coralie laughed. She thrust her tiny hand through his arm. "You will do this for me, won't you, Harry? . . . I'd be . . . ever so grateful." Her eyes smiled up at him and her pressure on his arm tightened.

Harry Herron would have investigated the private life of the man in the moon just then to earn Coralie's gratitude. He mumbled hastily, "Sure, Coralie. Anything you say. I'll put a man on the job tomorrow."

CHAPTER XIX.

Guy's Confession.

It took Lyn some time to wake up. She was so tired. Her eyes rested first on the mauve taffeta curtains, made transparent by sunlight. Somehow those curtains had come to be a symbol of her changed status. She often thought, "I always wanted curtains like these, but I never could afford them at home."

Most mornings her eyes would light upon them, greedily, pleasurably. But this morning—she hadn't any idea why—she felt oddly homesick for those gay cretonne curtains she had made herself out of bargain basement remnants. She felt, somehow, it would be jolly to scramble out of bed and run to the front door to take in the milk bottle, then patter off into the kitchenette to see if, by some miracle, there was still a fresh egg left . . . to have Lancelot come mewing around her legs hungrily demanding attention.

Lancelot was here now: curled up in a gilt painted cat basket beside the mauve satin eiderdown that had slipped to the floor. He really looked most comic in his new magnificence. It didn't go with his gaunt angular frame nor his bitten ears. An excess of good food had made him lazy. It seemed to have dulled his zest for life. She stared down at him, wondering. "Is my zest for life, too, becoming dulled . . . or is it just that I'm tired?"

A strange thought, surely, on this morning when the whole of London was ringing with her fame?

But she was tired. She lay back on the sleek linen pillows, crossed her arms under her mussed red head. A pale green nightdress brought out the golden tints in it. She let her eyes wander about the objects in the room, speculating on them idly. Almost as though there was one thought in her mind she didn't want to face. But, soon, she could crowd it out no longer. It was too dominant, far reaching, disturbing.

She was going to marry Kane Redman.

Now she had definitely admitted it she wondered why she had been shy of doing so. For, of course, it was a wonderful thought. Wasn't it what she had prayed would happen?

The events of the past night crowded back to her. Had all that actually happened to her? Like looking into some chapters of another girl's life. A girl who looked like her, felt like her, but wasn't really her. Her success at the High-Fly, Guy's extraordinary admission, and then, if all that wasn't enough for one night, Kane's declaration of love.

This morning, with the sunlight falling like a bright golden bauble on the carpet, she refused to countenance that absurd notion she had entertained last night . . . one which, for a time, had marred her happiness . . . that Kane only loved the girl he had created, not the real her inside. Nonsense! Last night they had both been overwrought. That was the explanation.

Supper in his flat. How cosily intimate it had been. Disturbingly intimate. Kane's gray eyes had devoured Lyn in a hungry, insatiable way. Once he had caught her hand under the table and jerked out, apropos of nothing at all, "My word, Lyn, how can you be content to wait?"

But she was very insistent upon that point. Perhaps because of that streak of puritanism in her. Or perhaps she was afraid . . .

She had tried to laugh him into a lighter mood. But he was possessed by passion. He pushed his plate aside, leant towards her, and said unsteadily, "D'you know, Lyn, I've never really wanted to marry a girl in my life before!" Then he had come round to her side of the table, drawing her up from the chair into his arms. He ran his hands over her hair, down her back . . . under the flimsy golden gown she could feel him hot and shaking. He whispered, "Are you a witch, child? I can't keep my eyes off you tonight. I can't keep from touching you . . ."

Lyn moved restlessly in bed and sighed. Lancelot stretched himself, springing on to the bed with a loud good-morning mew. She twitched his ears mechanically. Passion. . . was that all there was to love, she wondered? Did everything else exist only in romantic imagining? A man thought you beautiful, desired you, married you because he couldn't get you without marriage? But, at that, something hidden deep in Lyn cried out in protest. Surely that wasn't all! Where were those dreams she had woven on dark stormy nights, curled up on the hard little window-seat, Malory's "Mort d'Artur" lying open on her lap? Where were those visions of chivalry and romance that had made a bright tapestry of her thoughts?

Would Kane ever love her like that? With tenderness, chivalry, humility? Her lips twisted slightly. Was it in Kane to humble himself? Could he ever worship any girl?

Well, she had chosen him. She had loved him for so long. And she was happy. She kept repeating that. She was happy.

But the bright glow of sunlight seemed to have dimmed. It did not seem half as bright for instance, as it had on that first morning when she had dressed to meet Kane for lunch at the Renard. How high her hopes had run! She felt wistful, and was furious with herself. Wasn't this better, infinitely better, this glorious realization of all her dreams? Of course, of course! Perhaps sunlight isn't so bright through expensive taffeta curtains as through cheap cretonne ones!

The maid brought in her breakfast on a daintily clothed tray. Kane had taken this flat for her, in a building of fashionable service flats in Mayfair. The little maid drew back the curtains and said: "Would madam care to have the newspapers? They are full of madam's great success."

"Let me see them," said Lyn.

But, it was odd, how uninterested she felt in reading the flattering report of her dancing. She saw the headlines, "Grace brought back to the ballroom," and smiled. Guy's idea, that. It occurred to her now how much of her success was due to Guy.

The thought of him settled over her like a soft, warm shawl. Which was odd, since they professed to hate each other.

The maid had returned to the room, bringing an opened box of hothouse roses. She laid them on the bed beside Lyn. Lyn glanced at what was written on the card. "A reminder of my love. . . Kane." The roses were vivid scarlet. A shiver ran through her. . . Somehow she wished they had been a gentler color. Rose pink. . . or golden yellow.

"There's a gentleman, Mr. Beauclaire, to see you," the maid said. "He came last night, after midnight, but madam had not then returned home."

Lyn raised herself to her elbow. She pushed the red hair off her brow. Guy here! Before eleven in the morning? And he had called last night. What was so urgent he wanted to see her about?

She sprang out of bed; lay, a few minutes, in a luke-warm bath the maid had drawn for her; enveloped herself in a huge orientally striped bath sheet; ran into the bedroom, powdered her back by the aid of a side mirror—a powdered back gives you such a pleasant feeling of being well dressed—stepped into a faintly green crepe de Chine teddy. Then into a sports dress, much the same shade of green; stockings of cobwebby consistency, fawn leather shoes. Lyn thought, "I could give up everything sooner than the luscious sense of being well dressed all through!"

She was ready. She ran a comb up through her hair. "Going to an office every morning does teach you how to dress in a hurry!" she thought.

Somehow it was good to know

Lovely Clay—by Maysie Greig

Guy was in the next room, waiting to see her!

"Hello, Guy." She stood framed in the doorway. She smiled faintly, uncertainly. Her smile said, "That was all nonsense last night in the corridor, wasn't it? We are going to be friends?"

It was strange how insistent she was upon that. As though she were, somehow, in need of a friend. Which seemed absurd, on the face of it. Here she was, an established success. Not only that, but engaged to Kane Redman. Yet, subconsciously she knew that Kane might be a husband and lover, but never a friend. She thought, and was furious with herself for the disloyalty of the thought: "It's funny how sometimes you can love a man you don't altogether like!"

Guy straightened himself. He had been leaning, propped against the gramophone stand. A light gray sports suit, immaculately cut, accentuated his darkness. But this morning there was a whitish look to his face, and a curious expression in his eyes.

Since he didn't return her greeting, Lyn tried again. Her smile had become strained. "We pulled it off last night, didn't we?"

"Oh, you mean the dancing? Yes, I guess that went over all right."

The disinterested note in his voice annoyed her. She said, a little angrily, "You're not very enthusiastic about it, are you?"

That flushed, defiant look of hers ought to have warned him. But, at the moment, there were but two thoughts in his head. Was she or was she not a tool of Kane Redman's? And where had he taken her after they had left the club?

"I called last night," he began. "There's something I wanted to ask you . . ."

He paused, and in the pause she raised her eyebrows and said pointedly, "Yes?"

"A remark I heard last night made me wonder . . ." And again he paused. "Blame it all, Lyn," he rumbled, running a hand distractedly through his dark hair—now he was face to face with her all the carefully thought out sentences fled from his mind. "Were you or were you not in league with that fellow Redman over the stealing of Jaza Jackman's pearls?"

The pause was so long, it became threatening. Lyn felt quite furious with him suddenly. For one thing she resented the tone in which he had said "that fellow Redman." For another . . . why must he continually harp on the ghastly fiasco of those pearls? Surely he had enough sense to know it wasn't in her deliberately to steal anything?

Since she remained silent Guy accused, "I suppose you were! I suppose that was another of his many publicity stunts, Lyn," and suddenly his eyes blazed down at her black and demanding, "are you just another of his stunts?"

Her own color was hot now. She could feel the tips of her ears tingle. She drew a quick breath and one thin hand curved around her throat. "Just what do you mean?"

His laughter mocked her. "You know . . . all this bunk about his being your publicity agent. I never did swallow that. What are you to him? Where did he take you last night after you left the club?"

She drew back, as though he had struck at her. She was too astounded to be angry, just then.

"Why, we went back to his flat for supper," she faltered. Then, whipping up her defiance, "Is there anything unusual in that?"

Guy smiled grimly. "It depends on the man. And I happen to have my own ideas about Mr. Kane Redman."

Lyn set her teeth. She hated Guy. How had she, even for a moment, imagined she wanted to be friends with him?

"Have you? That's very interesting." She found it terribly hard to keep her voice under control. "So have I, as a matter of fact. Yes," she went on, before he could interrupt her, "I've very definite ideas on Kane; as it happens . . . we're going to be married at the end of this month."

She turned quickly away from him, as she said it. Because, for no good reason, she felt on the verge of hysteria. How dare he come here and make her feel so wretched? What right had he to continue to insult her? And anyhow, why should she care?

She didn't. She didn't, she assured herself vehemently. She didn't care what he said, what he thought. As though to emphasize this in her own mind, she swung towards him and said, her husky voice choked with fury:

"What's it to you, anyhow? Why are you standing there just staring at me?"

When Guy spoke there was something curious about the sound of his voice.

"You can't marry Kane, Lyn," he said.

But that seemed only to make her madder still. She was a little flaming thing by this time, inwardly, outwardly. Even that astounding red hair seemed to have taken on an added red hue.

"Why?" she demanded.

Guy had quite a few reasons why she shouldn't marry Kane Redman. For one thing he personally distrusted the man. For another he had heard unsavory accounts of his past affairs with women. All this he might have said, but he didn't. Instead he blurted out, and afterwards it seemed to him quite inexcusable:

"Lyn . . . don't you know? I love you myself."

There was rather a terrible silence after that. Ordinary conversation was out of the question.

Lyn's eyes widened, they seemed to usurp the rest of her face. She whispered, "Don't Guy . . . You mustn't."

"Musn't?" He gave a choked laugh. "Do you think I would . . . if I could help myself?"

Pity for him—pity, perhaps, for herself—fled from her eyes. She stiffened. "What do you mean?"

He thrust his hand deep into his pockets and stood looking down at her, bitterly. "Do you think you're the sort of girl a man would want to love? A girl reputed to have had all the love affairs you've had? A girl in league with a man like Kane Redman? My dear Lyn, I've been trying to stop myself loving you for weeks. I've told myself you're heartless, worthless, and probably out for all you can get. I've called myself all manner of fools. But that doesn't seem to help much. There it is." He heaved a sigh, leant against the wall, and crossed his legs. "It's out now. We know where we stand."

Lyn had moved over to the window. She stood, apparently, gazing out, but seeing nothing at all. There was a blurred film between her and the people down in the street, who dodged here and there, like so many ants, missing buses and taxis by the skin of their teeth. Presently she said, and her voice had a dull flat quality to it, "We can't go on together—now."

Guy cocked an eyebrow. "Can't we? I think, my dear, there's no avoiding it. Although," he drew a quick breath, "I'd be quite willing to get out. This thing is getting—just a bit too much for me."

"In that case it should be easy to arrange," Lyn's voice still held that peculiar dead note. "I'll speak to Kane about it at lunch today."

"Good," said Guy. He straightened himself, picking his light gray velour hat off the chair. "Although," he smiled quizzically, "I don't think it will be so easy to arrange as you seem to imagine. I fancy you'll find your dear fiance may be an obliging lover but he is a business man first."

So saying he bowed mockingly to Lyn, and whistling the tune they had danced to last night, let himself out of the flat.

They were lunching together that day when Lyn broached to Kane the subject of a new partner. And, although at the moment she was probably the most famous of all the stars there, theatrical and talkie, none recognized her, thanks to the tiny golden mask she wore while dancing.

"Couldn't you find me another partner?" she jerked out as though half hating to make the request. "I don't care to dance with Guy Beauclaire any longer."

Kane raised his eyebrows in surprise. Then he frowned. "Nonsense, Lyn. You couldn't find another partner at this eleventh hour. Besides . . . I'll admit it to you, that Beauclaire chap is a considerable draw. Ricardi, I'm sure, wouldn't consent to a dissolution of the partnership."

Lyn's small face hardened. "Supposing I refuse to dance with him again?"

Kane pushed the plate of hors-d'oeuvres aside and asked tersely:

"What's up? Has he been trying any monkey business? Making love to you?"

"Oh, no," Lyn said quickly, but she knew she 'ad flushed. "Nothing like that."

Kane grunted. "I'd wring his neck if he had." There was a pause, while the waiter cleared away the hors-d'oeuvres and put lobster au gratin before them. "What's all this about, anyhow?" he demanded.

Surely, since she was engaged to him it should have been possible for Lyn to tell Kane the truth? That Guy had told her he loved her one moment, insulted her the next. Odd, but that possibility never occurred to her. Why was she instinctively trying to shield Guy, even after that scene in her flat?

"Perhaps it's a whim of mine, Kane," she murmured, presently.

"A whim?" he laughed. "My dear child, you're not sufficiently established to allow yourself whims. Especially not whims that may interfere with your pocket. Besides . . . there's a lot of money involved in this. You realize that, don't you? For you to break with Beauclaire now would ruin everything. Listen, I've got a great stunt planned for the end of the week."

"Yes?" prompted Lyn, but her tone lacked interest. She was still too overwrought from this morning, she supposed, to be thrilled about anything. Even the fact that she was here, at Sovrani's, lunching with Kane; that he had ordered the most perfect of meals; that a bouquet of mauve orchids, resting on cool maidenhair fern, was beside her plate. Orchids, the pampered, the exotic tribute to some indefinable quality in womanhood. To some women all men give orchids, as though these delicate blooms were their birthright. Yet others equally attractive on the surface—never receive them. Why? Are orchids the male response to the ultra feminine?

Kane had said, when they first sat down at the table, "Did you like the roses I sent you this morning?"

She nodded. "Yes . . ." Then she fingered the orchids. "But I like these better."

He smiled. "Typical woman! Only the most expensive satisfies you!"

Lyn flushed. "It's not that." She didn't explain. She couldn't to him. But those scarlet roses had suggested that side to his love she wanted to put from her thoughts. Yet, as she looked across the table towards him, the question rose disturbingly in her mind. . . . Was there another side to his love?

Kane was elaborating on his new plan for giving her fresh publicity.

"I'm going to bring to life the jealous husband who is out for your blood," he chuckled. "That ought to give the papers something fresh to talk about! It'll be a grand sensation, a splash on all the front pages. . ."

"Kane, surely I have had notoriety enough!" Lyn cried out suddenly.

She felt—for no reason she could name—terribly antagonistic to this new scheme of his. If only, having once established her, he would let it go at that. Let her succeed or fail by her dancing alone.

But it was not in Kane's nature to let anything be. He had the restlessness of genius, some of its madness, too. Once he had embarked on a stunt he was never content until he had exploited it to its fullest extent.

"Rot," he said impatiently, "that's why most people fail. They're content with small successes. Life will never let you stand still. You must either go forward or backward. If I let this thing rest people would have forgotten you in a week. They'd cease to have any inclination to come and see you. No, we've got to keep at it."

Lyn found herself shivering, although it was warm in the restaurant. Once again, as that night when she had stood high above Paris, the warning flashed into her mind. "Where is it all going to end?"

What you value most is that feeling of security Kotex gives

Kotex absorbs quickly; it is adjustable; it may be worn on either side with equal protection.

WHAT you really want in sanitary protection—more than any other one thing—is a feeling of perfect safety and security. To know you are well protected, despite long hours at work, at the theatre, out-of-doors. To feel safe. To keep well poised and thoroughly at ease. This is one of the most important assurances Kotex gives you.

So highly absorbent

Kotex, in the first place, is so tremendously absorbent . . . by test, five times more so than the finest of surgical cotton. And the way it absorbs is important—"lateral absorption"—a process which makes the pad effective not in one area but over the entire surface.

The delicate fibers of Cellucotton (not cotton) absorbent wadding carry moisture swiftly away from the surface, leaving the protective area delicate and comfortable for hours. Kotex is treated to deodorize—an important aid to daintiness.

Wear it on either side

Kotex may be worn on either side with equal protection, equal comfort. No danger of embarrassment, no fear of inadequate protection from wrong adjustment.

Hospitals use it because of its hygienic safety, its amazing absorbency. You'll find it wise to specify Kotex next time you buy sanitary protection.

Kotex Company, Chicago, Illinois.

IN HOSPITALS . . .

1—The Kotex absorbent is the identical material used by surgeons in 85% of the country's leading hospitals.

2—Kotex is soft . . . Not merely an apparent softness, that soon packs into chafing hardness. But a delicate, lasting softness.

3—Can be worn on either side with equal comfort, no embarrassment.

4—Disposable, instantly, completely.

here anywhere, could you tell me?"

Mrs. Van Kloort tossed her head in the direction of the open door.

"You'll find him in there," she said, in her dissatisfied way. "But I think you'd better wait here. He's talking to Mr. Van Kloort. Oh, here's that—here's Carol. My dear, haven't they brought your things from the village yet?"

Carol swung an easy leg over the porch railing.

"Yes, and Bill's here, too."

"Bill?"

"My dog."

"Oh," murmured Mrs. Van Kloort, helplessly. "We've no room—I mean, we've never—Mr. Van Kloort won't care about that, I'm afraid."

"Well, I didn't ask to come here, nor did Bill," Carol reminded her coldly. "Now we are here, you'll have to make the best of us."

"Until your father comes back," sighed her hostess.

Carol turned white. Her eyes sought Marlowe's and he stood up.

"We might go and have a look at Bill," he said. "Mrs. Van Kloort, you'll excuse us."

He lifted Carol down from the railing, in spite of Mrs. Van Kloort's scandalized expression. Carol walked leisurely by his side towards the orange trees. She thrust a careless arm into his, and he gave it a reassuring squeeze.

"Don't look back," she said, "and don't walk fast. I want to talk quickly. There mayn't be much time. Don't stare about, but if you can see Ridley, tell me."

"I followed him up, so he's somewhere around."

"There's a door at the back of the house. We'll work round that way. He may have gone in."

"Are you afraid of him?"

"A bit. He looked at me down at Hendry's as if he was undressing me. He and Van Kloort know about my father, I think."

"You're right there. Ridley knows something, and what he knows Van Kloort knows. I wonder—"

"Well?"

"Your father wanted a concession to fish for pearls round Paiku and to land there if necessary. I'm not blaming Hackett, mind. But Bruce and I said, never mind any concession. What's to stop us going there without permission? Let's chance it, we said. But Hackett wouldn't. You see, if you go on an island without any right to be there, and take what you find—well, you're liable to be slung in goal on Amanu. They reckon it's thieving, see? And whatever you get has to go to the Government. But you can buy a concession, and then you're all right. Government takes a share, but not very much, and the rest's your own. At any rate that's the way things work in this group. They may be different in different parts. Now I look at it this way. When Hackett asked for a concession for Paiku, old Van smelt a rat."

"Did my father tell him the real reason?"

"No, of course Hackett wouldn't be such a fool. But Van Kloort might find out all the same."

"How could he?"

He stopped and faced her.

"Where did your father go the night before he sailed?"

She understood then.

"You think—she got it out of him?"

"She'd get it out of the devil himself, if she wanted to," he said.

Carol walked on in silence. They were veering round to the back of the house, which was in the shade so early in the day. Here the windows were open, and the dull murmur of voices drifted out on the still air. Carol reached out and pulled Marlowe closer. Together they crept forward till they stood as close as they dared to the room where Bruce stood with his back to the wall.

CHAPTER VII.

Checked.

VAN KLOORT'S puffy face was red with fear and cunning. His eyes went from Bruce to Ridley, from Ridley to Bruce. His fat white hand played nervously with a piece of torn paper on the polished table at which he sat. The morning's exertion had reduced his linen collar to a rag. The white suit that he wore was already crumpled and untidy.

"I don't understand," he was saying fretfully. "I don't know why you come up here and make all this fuss. How do I know what's happened to Hackett? You seem to think I've got him in my pocket."

"Then you don't know where he is?" said Bruce.

"How can I? Don't be such a fool."

"You saw him last Friday."

"Oh, yes, I saw him," assented Van Kloort with bland ease. "He came up here to see me about a little matter."

"A concession."

"Oh, you knew then? I had an idea that he was keeping it dark."

"A concession," repeated Bruce grimly, "for pearling rights and landing rights on Paiku."

Van Kloort nodded.

"Yes, yes. I would have given it to him—"

"Would have?"

The Governor smiled.

"You know my objection to granting—er—pearling rights to more than one person. The pearling rights which include in this case landing rights, are already granted."

"Granted?"

Van Kloort gave an oily smile.

"Hackett was too late."

The blood rushed to Bruce's head. He felt himself trembling violently.

"That's a lie," he got out at last. "You can't fool me—like that——"

The words stuck in his throat, choking him. He looked from one to the other. Ridley's impassive face gave him no help. But in those dark eyes he could detect a look of knowledge of triumph, that infuriated him. His voice came stuttering back.

"You—you—Ridley—was it to him you gave that concession? Answer me. Answer me, I tell you."

"Yes."

It was the first word that Ridley had spoken since he entered the room. Bruce turned on him.

"Huh! And do you mean to tell me you've been to Waihiti and back since Friday and got the second signature? You know it's not valid unless it's got Carruthers' name as well as Van Kloort's?"

"Yes."

"You're a liar," said Bruce desperately. "It would take eight days to go to Waihiti and back."

"Why do you think that Ridley has only just had the idea of fishing around Paiku?"

"He never thought of it until he found out that Hackett was after it."

"On the contrary," said Van Kloort flatly, "on the contrary. My dear Bruce, you are a hot young fool. Paiku has not come out of the sea in the night. Three months ago Ridley enquired about fishing rights. Personally I believe you are both mistaken. There are no pearls there, believe me, nor is there anything worth getting on the island itself. Nothing, do you hear? But I made out the papers for Ridley. Last time he went to Waihiti he took them to the Governor for signature. You know Carruthers' writing perhaps?"

"I've seen it."

"Ah! Then you would know his signature, hey?"

"Yes."

"Then you shall see it."

Ridley was unfolding a paper. The thin crackle sounded dryly in the still room. He was unfolding it, spreading it out with one dexterous hand on the table, while the other made a suggestive movement to his belt.

"Read it," he said.

Before Bruce's eyes a mist rose. He knew that Ridley had him covered. What a fool he had been to rush up there alone! Why hadn't he waited for Marlowe? Little beads of sweat broke out on his forehead as he read the paper through, right down to the bold scrawl "George Carruthers," at the bottom. Van Kloort's name and Ridley's name stared at him from the table. Rage and disappointment swelled like a tide in his heart. So quiet was the tense air that he could hear the muffled ticking of Van Kloort's watch.

"It's a trick," he said hoarsely. "How do I know that paper's not a forgery?"

Van Kloort rose stiffly.

"Are you accusing me of a crime?"

A warning gong sounded in

Bruce's brain, "Be careful. He'll get you if he can."

"I'm waiting," said Van Kloort. "If you're not satisfied we can take the whole thing into court at Amanu."

For a moment Bruce hesitated. Was it bluff on Van's part? Was the old sinner trying it on? Or was he really speaking the truth? If that really was a genuine signature . . .

Ridley folded up the paper and thrust it inside his shirt.

"You'll swear that's genuine?" said Bruce. "You'll give me your word of honor that—"

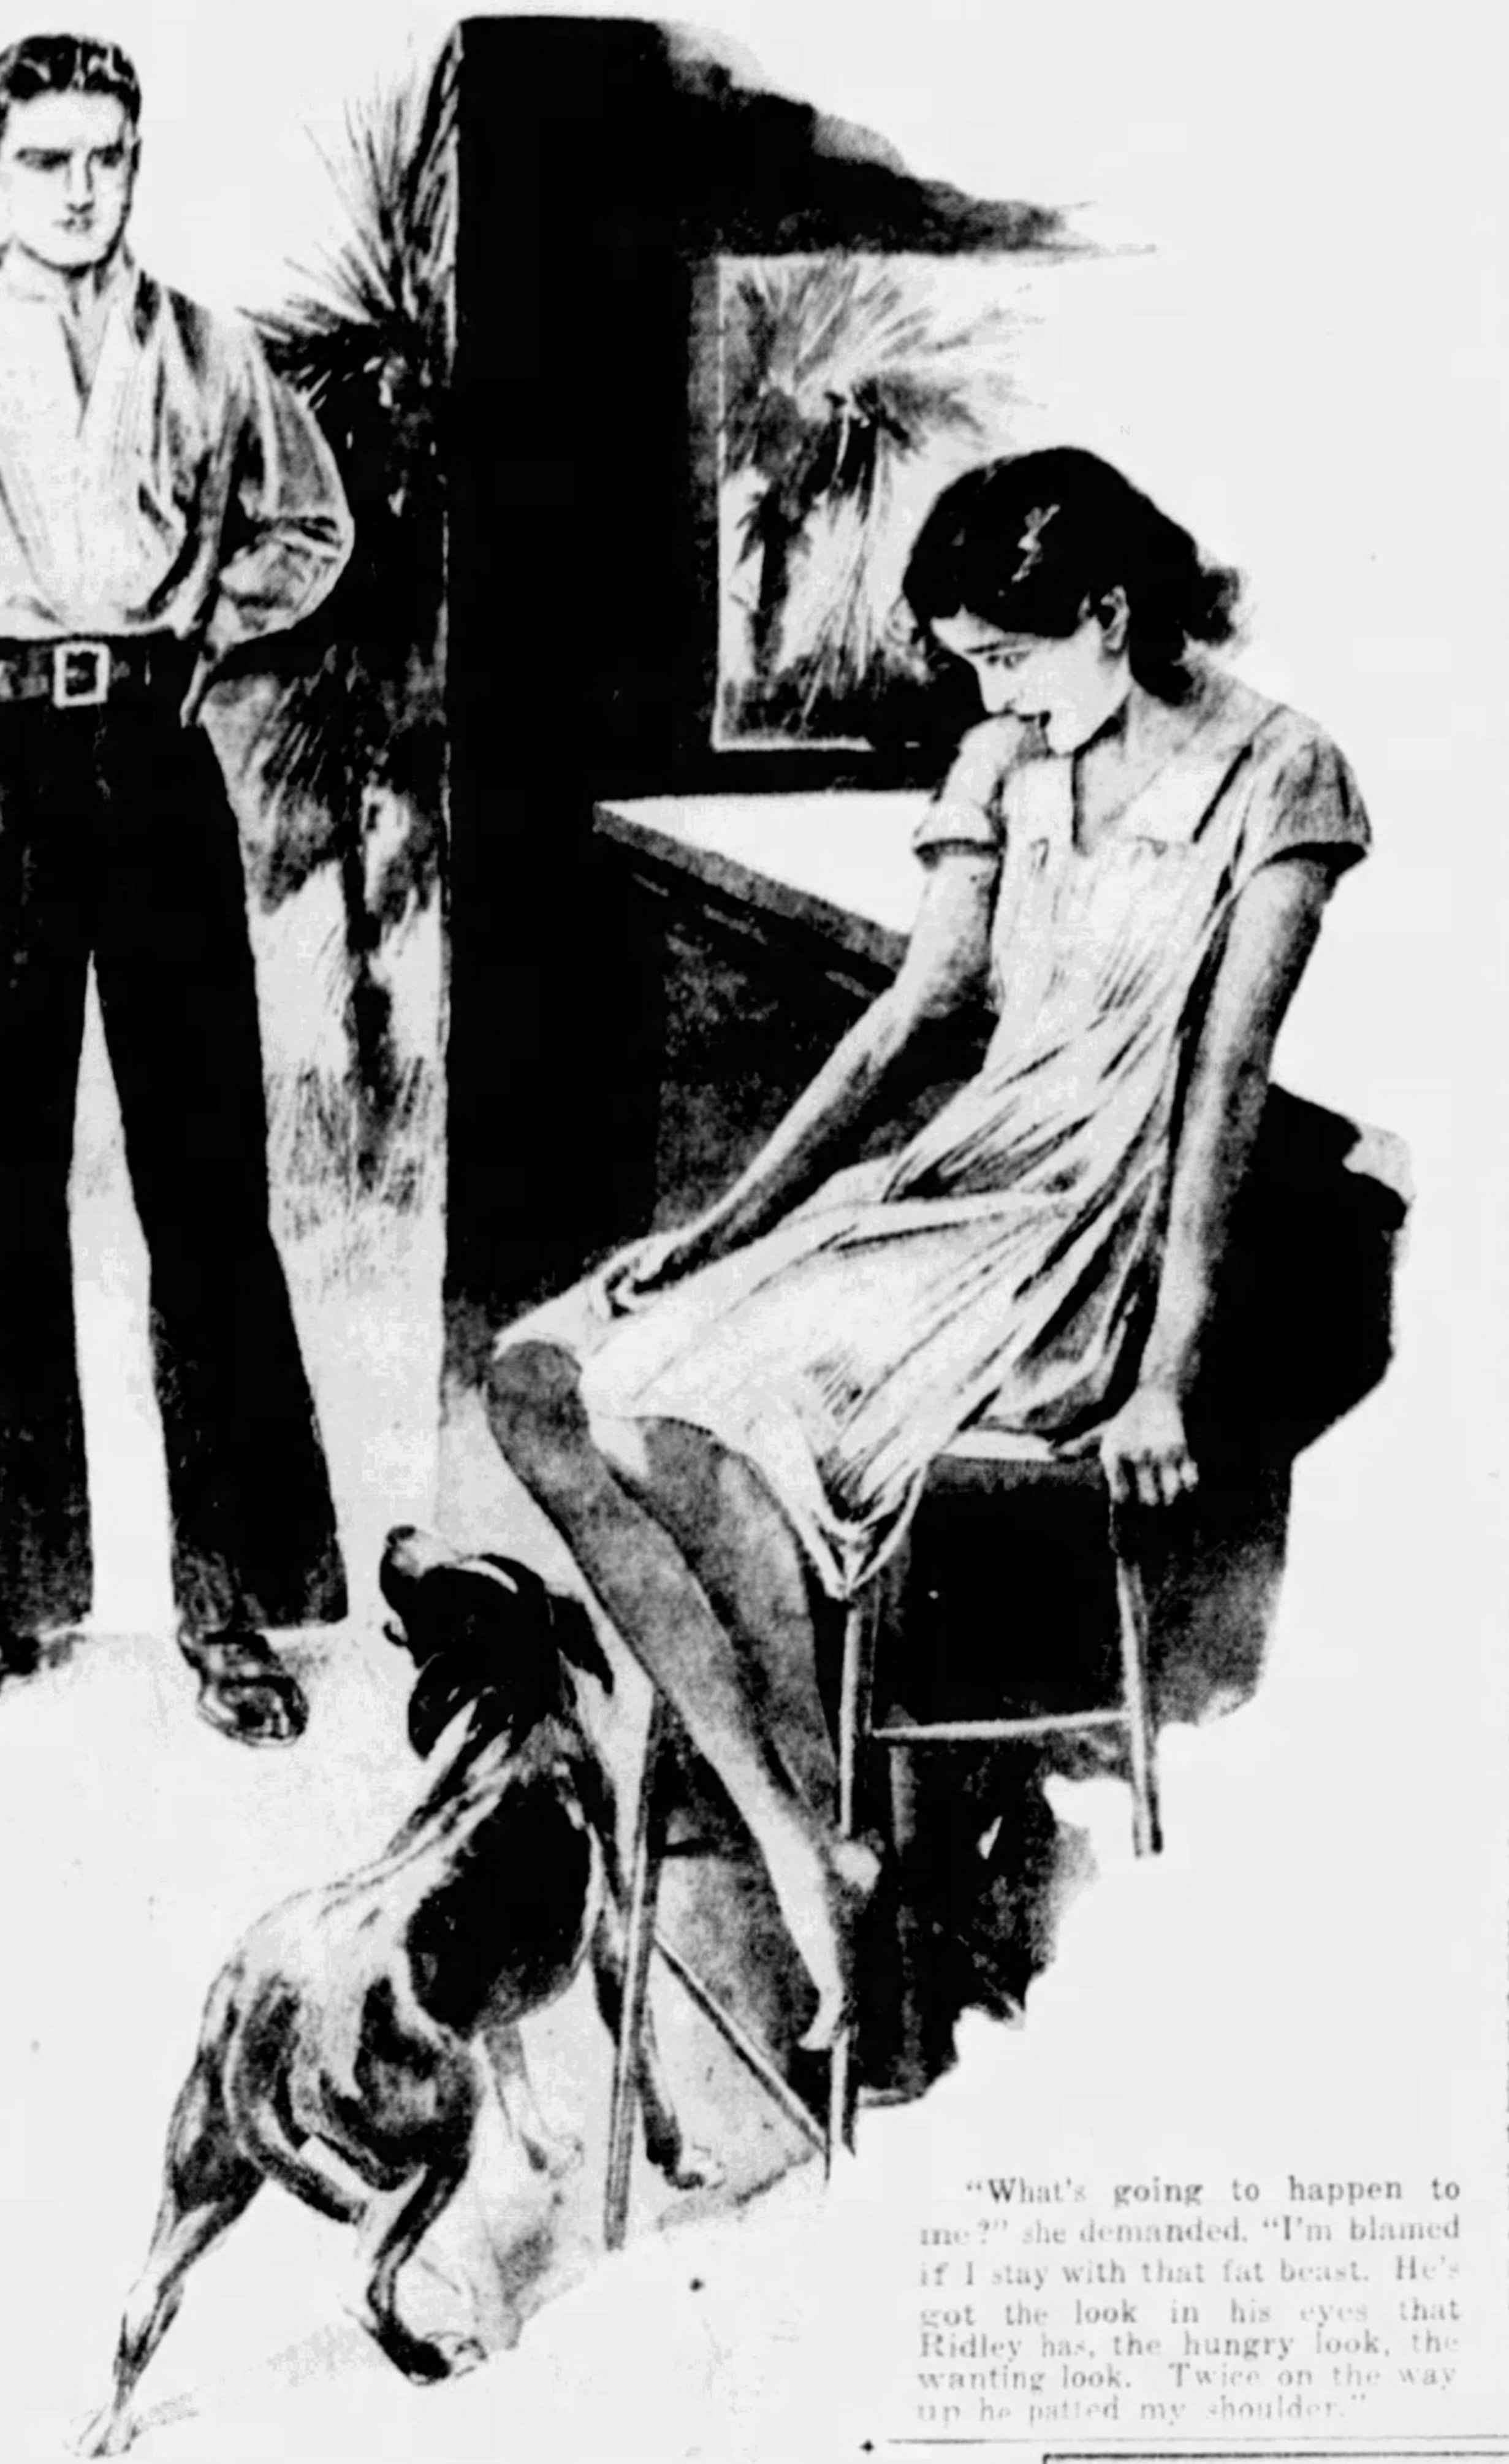
"Oh come, come," said Van Kloort, irritably. "Why are you making this fuss? Hysterical fuss all about nothing. You're a pair of idiots. There aren't any pearls round Paiku—"

"What does Ridley want the concession for, then? Tell me that. What's made you get so hot on pearling, Ridley? All the years you've been in the islands you've never troubled your head about Paiku. It's queer you should suddenly take a notion to go there. What do you want?"

"Come to that," said Ridley slowly, "what did Hackett want?"

There was a silence. To Carol and Marlowe, crouching outside the house, it seemed interminable. Then Bruce's voice crashed through the stillness.

"It's a put up job," he shouted. "Ridley, do you think you can get away with it like this? You know that Hackett wasn't after pearls. You know what there is on Paiku. Oh, yes, you got it out of Hackett before he died. Don't sit there like a dead fish pretending you don't know he's dead. His ship's gone, and the only thing left afloat was a bit of the longboat. It had been hacked to bits. What does that tell? What can it tell but one thing? Someone meant he should never have a chance of coming ashore. He told me he was going to get the concession from Van Kloort and take it to Waihiti for Carruthers' name. Huh, a long way he got, didn't he?"



Panic Seized Carol, the Swift Panic of Sudden Menace.

"You've got a touch of sun," said Van Kloort, his lips gone dry.

"You shall swing for it yet," Bruce went on heedlessly. "You and Ridley and Fanchon—you rule Les Aves—"

"You can leave Fanchon out of it," said Ridley curtly.

Bruce laughed bitterly.

"Oh, yes. Don't be comic. Is there anything on the island that she's left out of? Is there anybody's soul that she hasn't sucked dry? If it hadn't been for her Hackett might be alive now. I suppose you told her to get it out of him. Well, he's dead, or I'd say what ought to be said of him. Leave Fanchon out of it? Oh, you can bet your shirt I'll do that all right—"

"Good - morning," said Van Kloort unexpectedly. "I will close this—this interview."

He strode majestically to the door and threw it open.

"You are drunk, or else you have a touch of sun," he said. "You can walk out, or you can be thrown out."

Ridley stood up, and Bruce realized he had played his cards rather badly. He gathered what dignity he had left and walked down the wide passage that led to the porch. Mrs. Van Kloort waved a piece of silk at him, and patted a chair uncertainly, but he gave her a brusque greeting and left her with a foolish pout on her lips.

Out into the hot sunshine he went, his thoughts racing like greyhounds. He walked straight through the garden which was Van Kloort's hobby, past the orange trees until he struck the road that led downhill to the sea. The wind had died utterly.

All round him the steaming vegetation reeked with the strain of growth, of mastery over the weaker things. The hateful, poisonous tui-tui, whose thorns carried death, clambered triumphantly over the lower bushes. The streaked jasmine, whose scent kills every flower near it, flaunted its deadly blooms on either hand. Straight ahead lay the sea, bluer than heaven, more cruel, more faithless than hell. Bruce shook off the panic that was creeping over him. Death, death everywhere, and most of all in the midst of this hot, struggling life . . .

He became aware of pursuit, and Marlowe's whistle brought him up sharp. He turned and waited for Carol and the other to come up. They were panting, and when they reached him they flopped down exhausted.

"Where've you come from?"

Marlowe waved speechlessly in the direction of the House.

"You've been up there?"

"Yes," sputtered Marlowe. "Lend me your handkerchief for my neck—mine's wringing wet. Yes, we were outside."

"Outside? You heard—"

"I heard the world's prize mutt giving a demonstration," retorted Marlowe. "They do say dark hair shows grit, and fair hair shows sense. Well, fair you may be, but sense you've got none. I'd have done better myself. What got you? I ask you, what got you?"

Bruce flushed angrily.

"I lost my temper. You needn't be funny about it. To see those two, sitting there—"

"All right, don't shout," said Carol. She clasped her hands round her knees and looked at him speculatively. "Marlowe's right, you know. You were a fool."

"Thanks," said Bruce. "The thing is, what's going to be done now?"

"Seeing you've laid all your cards on the table in a nice neat row," Marlowe jeered at him; "I guess Ridley will be able to arrange his hand very comfortably. What do you think ought to be done?"

"I'll bet that Carruthers' signature is forged."

"Well?"

"Well, I'm going to make sure."

"How?"

"I'm going right back to Waihiti to ask him."

"Of course you are! You're the boy for brains. 'Struth, yes! You perishing fool, that's what they want. Most likely they're putting up a prayer about it right now. You can bet your life that was their idea in showing you that fancy writing they called a concession. And while you're away on a fool's errand to Waihiti, what will Ridley do? Sit down and wait till you come back, I suppose. He won't go slipping off to Paiku, will he? Oh, no."

"If Carruthers didn't sign that concession it won't be a fool's errand."

Carol and Marlowe looked at each other in despair.

"What of that?" said Marlowe. "Can't you see that if Ridley gets to Paiku first it won't matter a curse what happens next? If he can get away with the stuff, he and Van will be in clover until someone shoots 'em."

"There's the court at Amanu," said Bruce sullenly. "There'd be time to get a warrant—"

"You make me tired. There's no time. No time at all. Can't you understand, you fool?"

Carol flicked away a green beetle that was exploring her foot. The sun slid over her smooth hair, polishing it, bringing out the rare tints that lay hidden there. Her full, passionate mouth showed mutinous and angry.

"What's going to happen to me?" she demanded. "I'm blamed if I stay with that fat beast. He's got the look in his eyes that Ridley has, the hungry look, the wanting look. Twice on the way up he patted my shoulder."

"He thinks you're still only a child," said Bruce uneasily.

"Rot," Carol jeered at him. "Don't deceive your innocent mind, my boy. He looks at me that way because he wants me. Be shocked. Go on."

"How can you say these things?" said Marlowe, hotly.

"Have you ever thought," said Carol slowly, "just what I've been up against, since I was fifteen? They say experience is the best teacher. If I hadn't carried a gun, she'd have been mine by now."

They looked at her in silence, realizing for the first time how scant a protection old Susan must have been during Hackett's absences. Carol's toughness, her boyish ways, her language—what if they were the thorns which strove desperately to keep men's hands from the rose? What if this careless, defiant manner was but the outcome of Carol's fierce virginity? Who could say what sweetness of womanhood awaited a lover's discovery?

A crowd of Kanakas surged up the narrow road, shouting, gesticulating, on their way to the House to settle some grievance. Already two of them had stopped to fight it out with their knives. Bruce sprang to his feet.

"Come on. Turn in here along this path."

Hurriedly they plunged into the undergrowth, setting their feet on a little winding path that led down the hillside. The excited Kanakas swept on like maddened bulls. Anyone who stood in their path was likely to receive short shrift.

"Blasted swine," Bruce grumbled. "I hope Van shoots some of 'em. If he does, perhaps the rest will roast him."

They went on in the stifling sunshine, while the noise of the Kanakas sounded faintly in their ears. Better for them that they had kept to the road. Better they had fought a breathless passage through the press of angry brown bodies. For the twisting path led them past Fanchon's house, lying half hidden among the trees. Fanchon herself, unseen, watched them go by. And her eyes swept over Carol and over Marlowe. But when they reached Bruce they rested on him until he was out of sight.

ACTRESS TELLS SECRET

Tells How to Darken Gray Hair With a Home-Made Mixture

Joicey Williams, the well-known American actress, recently made the following statement about gray hair, and how to darken it with a home-made mixture:

"Anyone can prepare a simple mixture at home that will gradually darken gray, streaked or faded hair, and make it soft and glossy. To a half-pint of water add 1 ounce of bay rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and ¼ ounce of glycerine.

"These ingredients can be bought at any drug store at very little cost. Apply to the hair twice a week until the desired shade is obtained. This will make a gray-haired person look twenty years younger. It does not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy and does not rub off."

Smart women always give their first attention to the appearance of their hair.

Gives Your Hair an Alluring Loveliness—unobtainable by ordinary washing.

Why proper shampooing gives your hair added charm—and leaves it soft and silky, sparkling with life, gloss and lustre.

THERE is nothing so captivating as beautiful hair.

Soft, lovely, alluring hair has always been IRRESISTIBLE.

Fortunately, beautiful hair depends, almost entirely, upon the way you shampoo it.

A thin, oily film, or coating, is constantly forming on the hair. If allowed to remain, it catches the dust and dirt—hides the life and lustre—and the hair then becomes dull and unattractive.

Only thorough shampooing will remove this film and let the sparkle and the rich, natural color tones of the hair show.

Washing with ordinary soap fails to satisfactorily remove this film, because—it does not cleanse the hair properly.

Besides—the hair cannot stand the harsh effect of ordinary soaps.

The free alkali in ordinary soaps, soon dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle and ruins it.

That is why women, by the thousands, who value beautiful hair, use Mulsified Cocoanut Oil Shampoo. It cleans so thoroughly; is so mild and so pure, that it cannot possibly injure, no matter how often you use it.

Two or three teaspoonfuls of Mulsified in a glass or pitcher with a little warm water added, makes an abundance of . . . soft, rich, creamy lather . . . which cleanses thoroughly and rinses out easily, removing with it every particle of dust, dirt and dandruff.

You will notice the difference in your hair the very first time you use Mulsified, for it will feel so delightfully clean, and be so soft, silky, and fresh-looking.

Try a "Mulsified Shampoo" and see how your hair will sparkle—with new life, gloss and lustre.

See how easy it will be to manage and how lovely and alluring your hair will look.

You can get Mulsified Cocoanut Oil Shampoo at any drug store or toilet goods counter—anywhere in the world.

MULSIFIED COCOANUT OIL SHAMPOO

"Oh Baby

everything's going to be all right, now!"

"Umm'm, I'm so happy I can't help huggin' you! . . ."

"Well, for goodness' sake, stop it! Remember I don't feel any too well."

"That's just it . . . I know, now, what the trouble is! You're chafed. Your mother told my mother, and my mother said . . . it's all because of the wrong kind of powder!"

"You're sure?"

"Absolutely. And you're going to get my kind of powder, real quick! Just wait 'til you feel it. It's softer and finer than any you've known—and you'll never be chafed or cross again. Oh baby—everything's going to be all right, now!"

Make this thumb-and-finger test! It will show you an important difference in baby powders . . . Rub a little Johnson's Baby Powder between your thumb and finger—then try other baby powders. Your sense of touch will show you an important difference which the chemist sees under a microscope . . .

Johnson's Baby Powder is velvety soft and smooth—superlatively fine! That's because it is made from finest Italian talc, which is composed of soft, tiny flakes. But—the inferior talc used in some baby powders contains sharp, needle-like particles! You wouldn't want them next your baby's skin! Another important thing: Johnson's Baby Powder contains no stearate of zinc. Decide wisely!

FREE SAMPLES! Let us send you a generous free sample of Johnson's Baby Powder. With it we will include a free sample of Johnson's Baby Soap and Johnson's Baby Cream, which are also important to a baby's comfort. Write to Baby Products Division, Dept. W-1, Johnson & Johnson, New Brunswick, N. J.

What the Earliest Man Looked Like---A Study of Two Remarkable Skulls

apelike men have been sup- [illegible] apelike men and [illegible] his government the con- [illegible] Man's dominance over the [illegible] animals is entirely due to his superior intelligence and for that same reason Homo Sapiens still walks the earth onto which the last of the Neanderthalers and the Pekinenses sank long ago. From this obvious fact most people have assumed that the human brain will go right on growing, developing and improving until the race of a thousand or a million years hence will be one of huge brained intellectual supermen.

Such a thing is not impossible, but the record of the past and the tendencies of the present point in the opposite direction. This is the end of the age of mammals and is now the age of man, the one mammal who emerged triumphant over all the others. As has been mentioned, man in at least one form [illegible] in the latter half of the Tertiary Era. But before then, toward the end of the preceding one, the late Mesozoic, the lords of the world who looked far more invincible than man, were being exterminated: the great reptiles.

The reptiles had risen in the early Mesozoic Era in the form of the dinosaurs, whose special features were size, power and armor. The world shook under their tread. Anyone looking down from another world would surely have prophesied that nothing would ever displace Triceratops or Brontosaurus except a monster a size bigger and able to carry even more muscle and armor. Yet, long before man appeared, these invincible saurians had been wiped off the face of the earth by something, nobody knows what, leaving only their little cousins, the lizards of today, to represent them.

Long before them the fish, first one kind then another, ruled the world, and how early man must have envied the birds! As the saurians were declining, the birds were coming into their own and anyone might have expected that with their revolutionary invention of wings, taking them into an element all their own, the birds had forever removed themselves from competition with ground animals, just as they in turn had removed themselves forever from the jaws of the sharks. Yet now, except where bred by man, birds are nearer extermination than many kinds of four-footed animals. During the coal age the insects threatened to dominate the earth, but somehow missed their destiny for the time being. The same rise and fall has been seen in the vegetable kingdom.

Every form of life, just as it reaches its height, dominating the world is overthrown by something different. Man's weapon is his intelligence, but if the past is any guide to the future, brain will follow the same law as that of brawn, wing and claw and fang and armor. Intelligence and its organ, the brain, will reach its peak, run its course and be dethroned by something different.

Has that stage already arrived? According to the records of the fossils it has been passed. In the Old Stone Age, or Paleolithic Age, the human brain apparently reached its highest point in the Cro-Magnon man, with a brain bigger and better formed than that of the average civilized man today. So impressive are the skulls of this race of Stone Age cave men, who blossomed in Europe and perished, that marveling scientists have called them "Paleolithic Greeks." Yet their kind did not conquer the world but succumbed in favor of less intelligent men, who had less brains but more of something else, nobody knows what.

However, if the Cro-Magnon were a solitary exception, he might be disregarded as some sort of freak or accident. But he is not. There is the Boskop man, found in the Potchefstroom District of the Transvaal, South Africa. Here was a race of men with brains worthy of the Cro-Magnon. They had skulls with a capacity of 1,700 cubic centimeters, 400 better than the Bushmen, who live there today and 200 better than the average European and American who reads and writes and votes. This big-brained race seemed to have thrived in Africa about the same time as the Cro-Magnon was spreading over Europe. Perhaps he was the man who painted those wonderful pictures of prehistoric animals on African ledges and in caves. Yet, as in Europe, the low-brow was able to knock the high-brow out, perhaps because he was too smart, as the Neanderthal and Pekin man were too stupid to endure.

Some have speculated that insect intelligence which is of a very different order, incapable of plotting the course of a planet but alarmingly efficient in contriving to circumvent man, raid his food and multiply, may conquer the human kind. But even if it does not and man remains the boss of his world till the end of its history, still the development of the human brain is as likely to go backward as forward.

Fish to the Fore!

By Mrs. Christine Frederick,

The Distinguished Authority on Household Efficiency.

ONE might affirm that America was founded on fish, for those old New England pioneers made all other foods bow down to their "Sacred Cod," to their clams and chowder, and further down along the Atlantic, Baltimore as well as Boston, established a seafood tradition with its oysters, while New Orleans even now basks in the praise of its shrimp, pompano and bouillabaisse.

Yet few families seem genuinely fond of fish, often offered only on Fridays as a kind of apology or cheap meal when there might be a better one. I believe that an explanation of such a dislike lies either in failure to season and prepare fish skilfully, or the common habit of many housewives to serve it always and ever in ways which become monotonous through sheer repetition. Are there not many homes where one can tell the day of the week because fishballs are expected for dinner? Or, where fish is never seen save fried in a skillet or smothered under a pasty white sauce?

Fish cookery is one place where the woman in the home must measure up to the hotel chef. For thousands of husbands and men crowd the stools around a good oyster bar, or eagerly order the fish specials featured on the menus of high-class hotels. These men and other members of the family would enjoy fish if more pains were taken to understand its special technique in cooking.

As I have so often written, fish fibres are delicate, full of a gelatinous liquor, and must not be subjected to high, intense temperatures, or cooked for too long a period. If it is, the fish fibres or flesh becomes dry, tough, shriveled or altogether tasteless.

The good meat cook may make a very poor fish cook solely from failure to understand the chemical changes which heat makes on fish fibres. And, unlike meat, fish requires to be well seasoned in advance of cooking, thus rolling in seasoned flour, dipping in seasoned milk, basting with bacon or other savory fat is essential to bring out fish flavor.

Baked fish is perhaps the simplest method of preparation and one that tempts both eye and appetite. A whole fish makes the most striking appearance on the platter, but pieces or fillets of fish can be baked equally well. Never make the error of baking the fish in a pan and then trying to lift it from this pan onto the serving platter unless you are an expert! Save effort and dishwashing, as well as conserve its appearance, by always baking on glass oven-proof dishes, cooking and serving in the same dish. Vary the stuffings in the body slit, garnish with bacon strips on top, be sure and do not overcook, and a tempting meal results whether one uses whitefish, mackerel, bass or bluefish.

Small and split-open large fish can be baked, or what we might call oven-grilled, in the same way. There are many savory butters to spread on such split fillets; mustard, currie powder, tomato and onion, the strained juice of oysters, clams or shrimps. The creative cook will never be at a loss for seasonings! Sprinkle with buttered crumbs, a few gratings of sharp cheese—these, too, give savor—but avoid the monotonous curse of American cookery, the pasty cream sauce!

Apparently only the Orientals have the knack of making a fish bouillion as fragrant as perfume. One of my favorite eating places is a small Japanese restaurant where on each table is a humble iron skillet in which to cook, before one's eyes, the tasty suikiaki or stew. But my order begins with fish soup, so-called, and then follows fried shrimp. The soup is brought in a red lacquered bowl, and is as clear as any crystal trout pool could be—while floating in it is one sizeable piece of cooked fish, often indeed the head itself. A sliver of lemon peel is seen at the side, and how perfect, how exhilarating that fish bouillon proves to be! Our cookbooks give the recipe for a court bouillin made of fish bones and waste, but never does it result in a potion as delicious as this of the Japanese.

I may say that I have often duplicated this Japanese fried shrimp—which are first parboiled and then hulled, leaving, however, the tails on. The entire shrimp is then dipped by its tail into a simple salty fritter batter, fried in deep fat, and served at once with a separate small bowl of brown sauce. The American housewife can make a similar sauce of Worcestershire, with mustard, with horseradish or with tomato catsup thinned with a French dressing. Six shrimps in search of an appetite is a condensed title for a perfect dinner.

But leaving aside these exotic and somewhat difficult fish dishes, let us turn to old New England itself. Nothing dims the chowder and the cod and the clam tradition, and varieties of these sturdy staples are legion. Why always fishballs, when one may serve a change of grilled codfish steaks, baked or grilled codfish roe for breakfast, codfish and potato pie in a crisp pastry crust? Or a clam stew, with buttered hardtack biscuits, or a clam pie, grilled clams or what have you?

If the housewife lives in an inland town, far from the tang of salt air, and faces an inadequate local fish supply, let her rejoice that the tin can or the frozen fillet will come to her rescue. For, in even the past five years, the greatest progress in packing and marketing of all fish has occured.

✣ Another Sick Headache! ✣ Poisons from Here are Usually the Cause ✣ Add Yeast to Your Diet ✣

HOW WRETCHED headaches make you feel! Why not act to correct their cause? It is really very simple.

STOMACH
INTESTINES
© 1931, Standard Brands Incorporated

RIGHT HERE—in intestines become sluggish and clogged through neglect—is where poisons form that cause most headaches, physicians say. You must keep this vital region active, healthy and clean.

EATING FRESH YEAST will do it! Why not try it? Eat 3 cakes every day.

"Here's where those HEADACHES come from!"

Any doctor will tell you a headache is one of the first symptoms of INTESTINAL FATIGUE! Read how to overcome this trouble

THAT dull throbbing . . . throbbing! . . . You'd give worlds not to have those awful sick headaches, wouldn't you? Then why not strike at the underlying trouble that doctors say usually causes them?

For headaches, you know, are invariably a sign of disorder somewhere else. And generally—as any physician will confirm—the trouble is simply that old, unpleasant evil to which women are particularly subject—Intestinal Fatigue!

In Intestinal Fatigue, food material that has escaped digestion accumulates and stagnates in your intestinal tract. Poisons form. Your blood is polluted. You feel the effects in bad digestion, bad breath, bad skin—in loss of appetite and pep. And—in a majority of cases—you suffer from headaches and "nerves."

Now don't make the mistake of trying to cure Intestinal Fatigue with cathartics and pills. Such measures, at best, are only temporary. At worst, they are weakening, habit-forming, crude—and often they actually aggravate your trouble.

For more than three-quarters of a century, now, medical science has known of a remarkable method for correcting internal sluggishness without the use of drugs. Leading physicians in great medical centers throughout the world endorse it. Today it is available to you!

Eaten regularly, like any other food, Fleischmann's Yeast literally "tones up" your whole digestive and intestinal tract. It softens the clogging body wastes, stimulates natural secretions and fosters the normal intestinal action that keeps your system internally clean.

Thus, depressing poisons are cleared away. The cause of most headaches, colds, etc., is removed. Appetite picks up. You tire less quickly—feel more energetic and alert!

But these rewards come only to those who act! So go to your grocer, or to a restaurant or soda fountain and get a supply of Fleischmann's Yeast. Eat it regularly, three cakes a day—before meals, or between meals and at bedtime—plain or in a third of a glass of water (hot or cold) or any way you like.

Keep it up, too! Be patient. Give yeast time. Remember, you are not taking a drug. You are eating a food for the sake of correcting a trouble that has been developing for years.

And be sure you get Fleischmann's Yeast. Every cake is rich in three indispensable vitamins that ordinary foods often lack—vitamins B, G and D. Won't you try it?

Eat 3 cakes a day!

THE gleaming Pyrex casserole has always been a good cook's favorite dish for baking thrifty foods to succulent perfection. But up to now casseroles have stopped at that . . . they've never given the triple service this new dish can render! For we've topped a sparkling 1½-quart Pyrex casserole with a lid of new design . . . new uses. A lid one inch deep, seven inches wide. Smooth and level, and master of a repertoire of handy tricks.

Inverted and used as a separate dish, this lid bakes mushrooms, fruits, and small-family cakes and pies.

Still inverted . . . still holding any one of these savory foods, it fits right into the top of a casserole . . . and your oven holds two dishes where only one stood before!

To demonstrate its third new trick this lid steps down a peg, slides underneath the casserole, and protects your shining table from this dish that so efficiently "holds the heat."

Tempting Jaded Spring Appetites

By Mary Lee Swann,
The Well-Known Writer and Lecturer on Cooking.

Chantilly Mayonnaise Fruit Salad.

PREPARE any desired mixture of fruit. Serve on crisp lettuce with chantilly mayonnaise made as follows: Beat ½ cup cream until stiff, add ¼ teaspoon paprika, ¼ teaspoon salt and 1 cup of well seasoned mayonnaise dressing.

Spinach, Spring Style.

PICK over and wash ½ peck spinach. Cook in a very little water until tender. Drain and chop fine. Mix a few grains pepper, ½ teaspoon salt and ¼ cup salad oil. Then beat in 2½ tablespoons vinegar. Add to the chopped spinach. Shape in a mound in center of serving dish. Surround with thin slices of cold boiled ham and stuffed eggs or jellied eggs.

Luncheon Corn.

COOK 2 or 3 tablespoons finely chopped green pepper and ¼ crushed clove of garlic in 2 tablespoons butter until soft, but not browned. Add 1½ tablespoons flour and stir until frothy. Add 1 cup of cream and stir until mixture reaches boiling point. Add ½ teaspoon salt, a few grains pepper and 1 cup of stewed corn. Reheat over hot water. Serve in small buttered ramekins with a crisp sprig of parsley in the center of each ramekin.

Stuffed Green Peppers.

RUB 8 or 10 green peppers with oil or drippings and let stand in oven 2 or 3 minutes. With a clean cloth rub off skin. Carefully remove stem end, cutting out white portion and seeds. Finely chop 1 onion and the pepper trimmings, discarding the stem and seeds. Melt 2 tablespoons butter and add the onion and minced pepper. If you are sure your family will like the flavor, add 1 tablespoon curry powder. Stir constantly until vegetables are soft, but not browned. Add 2 cups of steamed rice, 1½ dozen sliced shrimps and ½ cup well seasoned chicken stock. Mix well. Season to taste with salt and paprika. Fill pepper cones with this mixture. Place peppers on small rounds of toast in a buttered baking dish and bake about 15 minutes.

Sardine Salad.

REMOVE skin and bones from sardines. Mash to a paste. To ¾ cup of the sardine paste add ¾ cup sifted hard cooked eggs. Shape in small balls. Arrange on crisp lettuce leaves. Garnish with sliced cucumbers. Serve with French or mayonnaise dressing.

Chantilly Mayonnaise Potato Salad.

PREPARE potato salad as usual. Many people prefer to have the potatoes cut in thin slices. Serve with chantilly mayonnaise made as directed. Serve on crisp lettuce with garnish of radish roses.

Vegetable Salad.

BOIL 2 or 3 large beets until tender. When cold remove skins, slice and cover with vinegar. Let stand overnight. Drain off vinegar and use for mayonnaise. Arrange mounds of beets, peas, asparagus tips and beans on crisp heart lettuce, serve with the red mayonnaise and garnish with mayonnaise roses.

Poor Man's Angel Cake.

MIX and sift 1 cup sugar, 1 cup flour, 2 teaspoons baking powder and ¼ teaspoon salt. Scald 1 cup milk in top of double boiler. Stir rapidly into sifted dry ingredients, beating so that mixture will not lump. Fold in 2 stiffly beaten egg whites. Turn into angel cake pan and bake in a moderate oven, or at about 350 degrees, for 45 minutes.

St. Patrick's Dessert.

REMOVE pulp from 2 grapefruit, reserving shells for serving. Cook a few sprigs of fresh mint in ¾ cup boiling water for 5 minutes. Soak 2 tablespoons gelatin in ½ cup cold water. Add ½ cup of the boiling mint water and stir until dissolved. Add ¾ cup sugar and dissolve. Add 1 cup ice water and 2 cups grapefruit juice and pulp. Chill. Cut in cubes and pile in the grapefruit baskets. Garnish with sprigs of mint and green cherries and serve with whipped cream.

Scotties after an etching by Morgan Dennis

then LISTEN!

TO THE IMPROVEMENT IN YOUR ENGINE

WINTER IS DEAD! Glorious months of open windshields are at hand. Let your car welcome Spring unhampered by the dangers of diluted "winter-worn" oil.

Winter-grade oil will never do for the warmer days that are here. Drain it off. Fill with the correct grade of Texaco! In every drop of this golden oil is new life and quietness for your motor. Listen to the difference!

Free from paraffin wax, and hard—carbon-forming elements, crack-proof Texaco sheathes every moving engine part, smoothing the action, quieting the sound. Heat cannot pierce it! Friction dwindles away before it! Perfectly protected, your engine purrs over the steepest hill and hums along the straightaway.

Begin long months of driving pleasure today at a Texaco Service Station. Drain—Fill—then Listen! A quieter engine immediately forecasts the finer performance that crack-proof Texaco always assures.

"ROMANCE," A CHARMING STUDY—*By John Young-Hunter.
This delightful painting by a distinguished artist was shown in the recent exhibition of the Allied Artists of America in New York and attracted enthusiastic attention. Born in Glasgow, Scotland, Mr. Young-Hunter studied under Alma-Tadema, Sargent and Orchardson, and came to America in 1913 to attain prominence in portraiture.

MARION DAVIES HAS A CAPTIVATING ZESTFULNESS.
This attractive young motion picture actress has an abundance of vivaciousness which is one of her principal charms in the pictures in which she is featured. Born in Brooklyn, New York, Miss Davies entered the films when but seventeen and has rapidly risen to take her place with the most popular and capable of the stars.

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA'S INDUSTRIAL LIFE PORTRAYED IN STRONG MANNER—*By Mrs. Johanna K. W. Hailman. This painting, "Clairton By-Product Works," by Pittsburgh's distinguished woman painter, was one of her group of three in the Twenty-ninth Carnegie Institute International. It is a powerful presentation on canvas of a very picturesque phase of life in this i ustrial community. Painting such an industrial subject is another indication of the versatility of Mrs. Hailman, who is particularly noted for her painting of flowers and gardens. She has also painted several sp did portraits.

SPRING FASHIONS

BLACK CREPE ELIZABETH.
Youthful lines relieve any sombreness in this informal "supper" dress with its flaring bertha collar and high-waisted bodice.

HEMSTITCH STRAW.
A novel idea is this hemstitched hat in brown baku which is banded in soft chartreuse crepe.

POWDER BLUE JERSEY.
Right: This sports suit, with its buttoned tuck-in shirt, is worn by Dorothy Jordan. The hat is of stitched felt of same shade.

FABRIC CROWN AND STRAW BRIM.
Black satin for the crown and fetching bow and black milan for the turned back brim is a new note in spring hats.

LARGE VEILS WILL BE WORN.
This type of veil is nothing more than a large flat circle of net with lace center and border. It is thrown over the head and hat donned afterwards.

BLACK LACE AND OSTRICH PLUMES.
For evening wear this hat with its sophisticated lines is shown by Leila Hyams.

WITH TUCKED ROLL BRIM.
Quite youthful is this tucked roll brim in brown paper panama with its gay little streamer bow of red grosgrain.

SPORT SUITS OF ANGORA.
Left: Gay youth wears these sports dresses. Joan Marsh, left, has a dress of a rich brown shade with blending scarf, while Conchita Montenegro, the Spanish type, chooses beige and orange colors.

NATTY NAUTICAL BEACH COSTUME
Right: This outfit of blue and white flannel has a summery and free quality to it. The belted blue jacket has pockets and white lapels and Marian Marsh wears the hat in a jaunty manner.

MELTS AT SKIN HEAT

new liquefying Cleansing Cream . . . acclaimed now by WOMEN HERE

Scientists worked three years to perfect this new cleansing cream formula.

SHE SEES DIFFERENCE! Simple comparison convinces woman.

Note contrast in old-type cleansing creams that go on skin like lard and new cream that melts at once, cleansing skin of dust, dirt, make-up.

HERE'S that remarkable new cleansing cream that actually changes from a solid to a liquid on contact with skin heat!

The moment you apply, it melts, penetrates pores, cleanses them of dirt, dust, make-up. Hinds Cleansing Cream, it is called.

Note, please, that it is utterly unlike old-type "heavy" cleansing creams that go on skin like lard.

Melts 2 to 7 times faster

This new cleansing cream liquefies from 2 to 7 times faster than any other popular-priced liquefying or so-called "liquefying" cream. Chemists have proved this.

Scientists worked 3 years in the Hinds laboratories to perfect the formula.

Remember this, please: many cleansing creams claim to be liquefying but Hinds is the only cleansing cream at anywhere near its price that is actually a liquefying cream.

Why use old-type creams?

Does it not seem utter folly to continue with old-type cleansing creams that merely skim surface of skin when first applied? That require vigorous massaging to penetrate?

Is this not folly of the worst kind when a far-sighted price policy on the part of the manufacturers gives you this remarkable expensive-type cream at the cost of ordinary creams?

You get this new cleansing cream in two sizes, at 40¢ and 65¢. Observe, please, the exquisite container. Buy Hinds Cleansing Cream today from your druggist.

On right, Hinds Cleansing Cream. Melts at once. Gently penetrates pores, removes dirt, dust, make-up. No rubbing needed. →

Diagram shows how old-type "heavy" cleansing cream remains on surface of skin when first applied. Thus requires strenuous rubbing to penetrate. This may stretch pores.

Diagram shows how Hinds Cleansing Cream melts instant it touches skin. How it penetrates immediately, cleansing pores of dirt, dust, make-up.

DRAMATIC TEST made at New York laboratory proves three new Hinds products equal in quality to products of the expensive lines bearing famous "individual" names and selling at prices from two to eight times more than they do.

Don't Put Up with Dry Skin!

There's a new-type skin softener!

Hinds Texture Cream, it's called.

A light, delicate cream you apply at night . . . it is utterly unlike old-type greasy softening creams. Hence you retire with face smooth and lovely.

No need to be uncomfortable with grease on face . . . in hair.

Absorbed rapidly by the skin, this scientifically compounded cream works through the night. Counteracts tight, drawn feeling of skin, scaliness, dryness. All that dry, scaly condition that makes skin look old vanishes. At all druggists. Hinds Texture Cream, 40¢ and 65¢.

Pores Large? Read This . . .

On a section of skin size of a dime there are 578 pores growing larger because of pore residue they must carry.

Get rid of pore residue and you get rid of large pores.

Hinds Toning Cleanser dissolves out pore residue.

It's that new liquid cleanser and solvent which is accomplishing such remarkable work in pore refining.

It is hailed as a real contribution to the large-pore problem now troubling American women.

What it does

Used after cleansing cream, it removes all traces of grease. Dissolves out all lingering particles of dirt, oil, pore residue.

Relieved of this residue, pores shrink back to normal size.

Use during day to cleanse skin when removing make-up. Make-up then applied gives you the lustrous look of glowing health.

Skin feels cool

Skin feels cool, refreshed, stimulated. You lose all that dull appearance.

Note, please, the new delicate skin texture, the vivid cleanliness, regular use of Hinds Toning Cleanser brings you. Positively will not dry skin. At your druggist's. Hinds Toning Cleanser, 65¢.

Notice to Women

These three new Hinds products are scientifically compounded to supplement each other.

Use them together, please. We urge you not to counteract their good effect by using ordinary creams and lotions with them.

Made by the makers of Hinds Honey and Almond Cream, used by American women for over fifty years.

Insist on the genuine Hinds Cleansing Cream, Hinds Texture Cream (in 40¢ and 65¢ sizes), and Hinds Toning Cleanser, 65¢. At all druggists. A. S. Hinds Co., Bloomfield, N. J.

A Challenge to Keen Observation!-

We Present This Original Test For An Opportunity To Win $700.00 Cash

No sport of today surpasses in thrills or skill the chariot races of ancient Greece and Rome. And in those pompous days, not even the return of a victorious general created a greater stir, for often the contenders in these famous races were national heroes, famed as warriors. The excited populace crowded to witness the spectacle of these great drivers matching their skill, wits and daring in the arena below—risking life and limb as they guided their horses through perilous openings or rounded a sharp curve without slackening their speed. Thejr horses responded quickly—seemed to catch the spirit of the race, for they were chosen with care and trained to amazing perfection.

Now in the illustration above, which pictures one of these great races, a surprising thing has happened. Just at the moment the artist chose to picture the horses, he caught full or partial views of them which appear to be alike. In fact, at first glance, comparing what you can see of the different horses, many of them appear to be identical. But, just as the drivers of old needed a keen eye to see the opportunity to speed through an opening to victory, so must you have a keen eye to find the only two horses, of the twelve pictured above, which are exactly alike.

Of all the horses shown either in full or in part—two, and only two, are identical in every visible detail—in harness, ornaments, markings, position of legs and head, etc. Will you be successful in finding them? That's the test. Duplicate prizes will be paid in case of ties.

There are Ten First Prizes—Ten new 1931 Chevrolet Sedans or Ten prizes of $600.00 each and several extra prizes of $100.00 besides for being prompt, making ten total cash prizes of $700.00 each. A total of $7940.00 will be paid to the winners selected by their grades when the final decision in this friend-making-prize distribution is made. No answers accepted from persons living outside U. S. A. or in Chicago. No obligation. So look closely and if you think you have found the only two identical horses, just mail their numbers promptly by letter or by card to

Quiet and Peace
There is a natural sentiment in the bosom of man, that after life's silver cord has been loosed, his resting place may be in some quiet, sequestered retreat: where the emblems of Truth and Divinity may surround him, in all their native simplicity and grandeur; where "God breathes through the leaves of the undisturbed forest trees, and smiles in a myriad of blooming flowers."

SENSATIONAL NEW RUG Revolutionizes Values!

Pittsburgh's leading stores now showing the marvelous new Gulistan Rug

Price for the 9 by 12 ft size: $125 Many other sizes from $8.50 up.

Unless you have visited the rug department of a good store recently, you don't know anything about rug values of today. A great change has taken place and Gulistan has caused it.

What does Gulistan mean? It means that you can have the silky beauty and pile-deep lustre of Oriental rugs in a reliable American rug at a price you can afford!

The very thing which made Oriental rugs the desire of all the world can now make your room into a dream of beauty!

The lovely shimmering sheen . . . the deep luxurious pile . . . the jewel-like colors.

Karagheusian, largest maker of Persian and Chinese rugs, is responsible for this amazing achievement. See Gulistan and you will think you have before you a costly Kirman or Kashan rug.

Even experts hesitate to tell the difference.

And for good reason! Karagheusian, in making Gulistan, uses most of the century old methods that have made the great Oriental rug tradition.

The same indispensable sturdy wool yarns . . . the finest dyes . . . the very same finishing processes as in their most luxurious Persian and Chinese rugs.

The wearing-power even exceeds that of popular-priced Oriental rugs, and the fabric has been demonstrated by actual test in the "Times" Model Home at Hartford, Conn., to emerge revealing hardly any signs of wear, after 83,000 people had trod and re-trodden it!

Today Gulistan is the biggest selling fine rug in America. It has transformed thousands of homes throughout the country.

Bid farewell to flat, dull-looking rugs. Enjoy soft, rich colors, deep generous pile, silky sheen, shimmering and changing tone with the light. The day of longing for Oriental beauty on your floor is over. You can have it at less than you ever dreamed of.

Go to your favorite store now!

No need to sift out substitutes.

Simply lift up the back of the rug and find the silken label pictured below.

Pittsburgh's great furniture and department stores are featuring Gulistan because they know that this is the rug you will henceforth insist on having!

● Gulistan designs reproduce world-famous examples of Persian art. Many of them are taken from originals of priceless value, owned by millionaires or museums. Illustrated above is a Royal Sarouk design. Note the richness of the motifs and the famous Oriental symbol of the tree of life.
